On the other hand, if you bought a ticket and couldn't come, you would have time to mail it to someone else or in the worst case, you just made a 15 quid donation to the Royal Marsden. I say go for it cuz we are counting on you.

I'm gonna go ask my dad when he gets back from work because the sofas are here and he was in a really good mood when he left.

There's really no way to predict if there will be future Dusty Days and where they will be. Apparently the first year the organizer ran off with the money. Then the boys did it for some years, and now Simon is doing it this year.

I remember at DD05 when there was talk of it being the last one and Pat Rhodes tearing up.

Long may they continue, but I would say get while the getting is good.

It wasn't the first year that the money disappeared, it was the third. The first one was run at a loss, there were no tickets and there were no acts, just a get together over 3 different pubs with music, quiz, raffle and video's and it was a big success. Personally, I hope that DD carries on and moves back to Henley, Simon also said he would like it to go back there, but it would have to be someone else organizing it.

BTW, if anyone has anything for a raffle or even the auction, it would be good if you could let Simon know or just say on here if you like. Just bring along on the day, but it would probably be good if he knew upfront of any auction items anyone may have.

Hi gang, has anyone thought about visiting Henley on the Saturday?.....Bab's and I have just finalised where we're staying (a hotel close to Heathrow airport) and before we check in we're going to have a diversion off the M25 motorway and head for Henley.

We'll be paying our respects to Dusty sometime in the Afternoon, it would be great to meet anyone who's also going to Henley!

I've asked hubby who said yes too reluctantly, I've asked my best friend who said the only song she knows is IOWTBWU. I tried to coax her with Kiki Dee but no can do . Do Children ever go to this event and what sort of age , Saffron, eyeliner girl and squirrel are easily persuaded but I dont want to do the wrong thing. I cant go on my own I need someone to hide behind and lean on.
