I'm glad that's your thinking, Cas - just what I was thinking. Many thanks :)

The Picasa saturation tool has made this a bit too yellow, it is actually much paler. Best I could do guys.

OMG, another brilliant picture, Wendy. You've got it. I love the colors too. I want to do my hair like that.
What do you find most challenging about drawing Dusty?
I would think each new project would be like starting over, too, as Dusty looked so differently in different photos, especially over time.

You already know you're awesome Wendy but I'm gonna tell you again. You're awesome. And that is one pretty damn good drawing.

Thanks you two both, you've given me a much needed boost, because I was thinking it wasn't much cop. I've been doing it for about 6 weeks I think, and I've spent a lot of those trying to improve it, but I knew I couldn't do any better even if I started again. It is a difficult one, because of the hair.

The challenge Nancy well, getting her hair right is the most difficult thing. 99% of the time it's getting the hair right. As far as I'm concerned I always feel confident I can get a likeness, and of course she is always so beautiful in her pictures, it's not exactly difficult to try and capture that beauty, especially her eyes and mouth. So it's a pleasure to draw, so I never get fed up with the subject, and I suppose the real challenge is getting in as many as I can, but at the same time I don't want to hurry and turn out a lot of substandard pictures.

She did look different over time, didn't she, but her beauty never faded.

I don't ever look at the photo before and think about it. I just wade in, and deal with the difficulties as they come, if they come. That's not being big headed, it's just being plain stupid.

That's amazing Wendy, I am in awe! 😊

I'd rather leave while I'm in love

Wendy, are you saying you don't look at the photograph as you draw the picture?

Do you have a photographic memory?

No what I meant Nancy, was I don't ever ask myself if I can do it, I just take it, and wade in. Now sometimes there are difficult bits in a drawing, but I never consider them before I start, I just get on with it, and if they arise, I just try to get over them. I usually can. But I always have the photo in front of me, and I also will blow the photo up on the computer, so that I can see the detail clearly, and I work between the computer and the photo. The difficult bits in this one are the hair, and if I stopped and thought about it, I may not have chosen the picture. But I was so focused on the lovely jacket and her face I didn't give a thought as to how to do the hair or whether I could do it.

I think this one is a hard one to capture Wend, facially difficult. You have the hair, and the jacket spot on. Good work.

I think it's beautifully done, Wendy, as your images always are - and you know what? I think this particular portrait has a wonderful "summer" feel to it. Possibly because of the roses and the lovely warm colours, but it comes with a great sense of joy. Nice one, Wendy!!
