You might want to flip through Hello magazine in the weeks leading up to the HOF induction as there is to be a Dusty article in there. Don't know which week yet, but both Pat and Duggie have been interviewed, so hopefully it'll be a good one.

Only got a minute, but just to let you know that the Hello article is out today. It's a four pager with pics and comments from Pat, Douggie, Keith Altham, Neil Tennant and others. Vicki is also part of it but from a quick read it all looks like lovely, positive stuff.

The pages are too big to fit into my scanner but there are four pics of Dusty (from the 60's, 80's and 90's), five if you count the huge one on the screen behind Patti Labelle. I know VW isn't everyone's fave person but I did find this couple of paragraphs, written as if she was speaking directly to Dusty, insightful and poignant.

"You were a diva. The car was always icy cold, the dressing rooms never big enough, the lighting on TV too harsh (you were right)and there never seemed to be enough Diet Coke on hand...You know, I miss it all.

You could certainly be difficult, but you never lost your sense of humour, even at the worst of times. I said goodbye to you for the last time at the Marsden Hospital, when you borrowed £10 off me for a packet of fags, gave me a big hug and said, 'I'm good for it' as you went down the corridor in your pink dressing gown. Yes, you are good for it - damn good. And that's how you'll be remembered".

What's the exact date of it?

While they refuse to sell The Daily Mail (at Book Soup and other fine reading establishments with HUGE newspaper/mag/periodical collections - They do carry Hello in LA....and in different international versions...such as the Mexican Hello...

It's like the brit version of People magazine.

Of course, with TC on the cover - the scientologists will scoop it all up Well..

I have this whole BINDER of letters and posts written by all kinds of Dusty fans and others about Vicki Wickham PLUS all the tabloid articles she did, and so, I never will have to speak of her or about her at any time - I can just pass the binder.

It's simply brilliant. 🙏

This one, is going into the binder. Oh yeah....

What struck me was that Dusty never trusted VW and always said she was worth more $$ dead than alive....and, knowing Dusty very well....that is exactly what she meant when she said "I'm good for it". She knew VW was gonna cash in on her after she died.

There was no reason for Dusty to love the music business.

Not the way she was treated.

And, still is being treated.

I guess the only way VW could find a way to becoming famous was to become infamous.

Judy Garland had an agent, who basically built ICM on money he stole from her in the 60's. ...when Judy was having a very rough time of it. It took him a few decades to finally kill himself with a bullet to his head, in a beverly hills hotel....

Judy's fans wanted him dead since the 60's....for decades they spoke about him with such contempt....he was truly a hated despised man....for how he treated her.

Sometimes, the only relief that comes for the fans...is when these characters finally DIE.

And, eventually - they do.

Dusty's career will really take off, once VW is out of the way....

Eventually, she'll be gone.

Hi Mads and Birdie,

Much has been said about VW, and while I'm certainly not a VW apologist, this isn't the place for accusations of this kind. And for once, she's actually said nice things about Dusty, so enjoy it while it lasts!

The issue with Kylie on the front is the one previous to the Dusty one, so it shouldn't be long coming to you.

I'm not sure why this thread has turned into a hate VW thread again, there was nothing in the article that Sophie posted to warrant it...apart from Vicki being part of it. Like it or not she was a part of Dusty's life, she done her wrong with the book but I get a bit cheesed off with everything turning into a hate fest where's she's concerned. She knows how the fans feel. It was a nice, positive article with only complimentary things said about Dusty, be happy, we don't often get that post DWD.

I've been meaning to do this for the past week. The first thing I noticed about the Hello spread was that the photo of Dusty from the AVFL sessions looked completely untouched. Basically she looked the age she was. The pictures that have been used in the past show a face free of lines and shadows. Dusty once said that she'd love to be able to touch up photo's and make people look amazing, so my guess is she'd prefer the airbrushed one.

Spot the difference....and which do you prefer?

Blimey Carole, I think in that photo she looks much older than what she would have been then - 56ish? I don't think she was a well woman by any stretch of the imagination at that time. Am I right in thinking the photo would have been taken after her first major lot of treatment when she was in 'remission'?

If I could get the notion of her being unwell out of my head I would say I prefer the first photo. I think you lose so much of the character of a person in an airbrushed photo.

As a matter of interest, I wonder why they didn't use an airbrushed version though? In this day and age its most unusual.

Well, I like both really. It's good to see the unretouched Dusty, it's nearer to having met her somehow. But a bit of retouching is what she would have wanted and I like to see her looking her best.

They probably used the wrong picture, maybe it escaped into the public domain!

I suspect she had the heavy makeup so it would not make her look too bleak in the retouched version. Seeing the pics as Real Woman contra Pop Star, I guess I'd prefer the RW.

Thank God for airbrushing!🙏

One thing that always amazed me about Dusty is that she looked like a different person every time I ran into her. It was like I think to myself: "damn that woman looks familiar... I know I know her from somewhere"... I'm serious.. it was very weird.

The 'real' photo is too 'real' for my comfort zone. I guess I prefer to remember Dusty as she looked the last time I saw her which probably was a good 6-7 years before this photo was taken.

Ah, but enough of my 'stuff' - Dusty still looked pretty good for an older sick woman.

I guess she would have been in remission when these pics were taken but although she always said she was "well" at this time, she also admitted to being very tired. Something in her eyes tells you she wasn't that well though. I can't imagine why Hello used this untouched shot, I'm amazed they even have it. The touched up one is also taken from a Hello spread just after she died.

There really is no such thing as 'remission', Carole G. That's really a euphemism for when the cancer cells aren't replicating. Also, if this photo was taken after Dusty went thru Chemo(and I suspect it was), the rigors of that treatment leave one in pretty bad shape anyhow. All things considered, she looks pretty good - though I dare not imagine what she looked like without make-up at that point. Very sad.

I do appreciate the term 'remission' Ro but not quite sure what else to call the gap before the cancer 'returned'. I'm sure the pics would have been taken after the chemo as it's the same hairstyle she had when doing the interviews where she said she was "well". She talked of the treatment, not the illness making her tired and appeared very positive, at least in public, during that two year gap.

We all mean the same, folks!....

Remission - The temporary disappearance of symptoms. The Oxford English Reference Dictionary p1219

I just think she did tremendously well during that period. I'm sure many of us have had first hand experience with family members, friends or indeed as individuals, and are all too well aware of the tremendously debilitating effects of cancer treatments.

Awh, hell, I've been in and out of "remission" more times than the good citizens of Baghdad have shouted "We want Saddam back!!!"

And, yes, the treatments are worse than the disease itself - to wit - before I knew the cancer was in me, I felt great - after the surgery and Chemo, I've haven't felt 'great' for so much as one day - it's been 9 1/2 years now.

So, 'remission' sure ain't what it's cracked up to be. 😞😞😞😞

I'm not looking for a Breast Cancer pity party - it's just that there's so much misinformation out there concerning this disease and its treatment. And, I'm certainly not the only one on this site who's had to deal with it - be it personally; family or friends - or, through Dusty's brave battle with BC.

Dusty did everything she was 'supposed' to do - took the Chemo, had the surgery, etc... etc... etc. That's the tragedy of 'remission'. A person works their a$$ off and still it very well could come back somewhere else to knock you down or kill you.

Isn't it about time for a cure? Cancer is merely a bunch of cells multiplying out of control. Cannot this cell duplication be arrested for once and for all? Seems simple enough....

Dusty shouldn't have died so relatively 'young'. Linda McCartney should still be with us. Patti LaBelle's 2 sisters should still be with her. There are so many more women - both famous and obscure - who should still be with us.

Looking at that unretouched picture breaks my heart... that sure isn't the Dusty I remember. It's very sad.

Love,
Ro
