Tattoos and piercings other than the ears were viewed differently then.

Very diplomatic Nancy. My first thought on reading Mads' post was that tats in that day and age were for tough bikers, excons and ex Navy personnel. There were no cute little butterflies on women's shoulders or interesting and artistic Celtic designs around arms or anything like that back then. In addition, before the current sterilization requirements, you were risking getting Hep A,B,C or worse if you went to a tattoo parlour for a tattoo. A tattoo was less artistic in those days and more a badge of the (often fringe) group to which you belonged. Dusty was trying to avoid being pidgeonholed!

If Dusty was the same old Dusty, but the top singer of 2007 at say age 24, do you think she'd have a tattoo?

Hopefully not, as that would mean Dusty was 'going with the flow', instead of having her own individual look. 🙄

As my late mother once said "Proper young ladies do not have tattoos!!!" 🙄
Now, what exactly a 'proper young lady' is is still up for grabs. 😊
