That looks really lovely Cor.

What criteria does it have to have to qualify to be a shrine. Would my wall full of pics qualify?

very nice Cor & Will. I have a few things scattered about (a few albums, cd/video collection)
Cor...don't tell me that's the flying monkey!! It looks larger than I thought..I have seen them in the store smaller. Is it just the perspective of the picture or is this a special one?

Latest version of shrine. Dusty is sharing a corner with Cassie, but I don't think she minds.

Hmm that primate does look kind of large. More the size of a small gorilla than a big monkey.

Wend, it's not the size that matters, y'know. He's still a dangerous flying monkey! 😊 And he looks so cool, doesn't he? Like he's hanging out with his best friend, the framed autograph. 🐵

Nancy, a wonderful shrine. Very beautiful. Almost brought a tear to my eye (and you know how stone butch I am). 😊

Will, what a wonderful tribute. Reminds me that I need to print out pictures from last year's DD and place them in my shrine.

Nice shrines Cor, Nancy and Will.

Wendy, of course all your drawings count. I still have to get mine framed and then I'll take pictures, but I'm clearing the walls in my study gradually! 😊 I always have my special Dusty picture to look at with the two records.

Will, I was disappointed to see I wasn't in the intimate circle of your Dusty friends! 🙄🙄

Cor, you are damned right about that monkey being dangerous. I may be the only person ever to be shot with a monkey! 😊 I reckon you might have to be "stone butch" to shoot your friend with a monkey! 🙄🙄

No, dear, you need ANOTHER room lol ;)

Seriously, wonderful portraits - and I like the male figures, especially the one top right; very nicely observed and drawn.

Cas, glad you like it - it was your comment that prompted it, as many people (for various reasons) may not have the chance to have a little Dusty corner; this one was for all.

Cor, thanks for starting this thread. I love seeing everyone's Dusty shrines. I don't have anything too elaborate but I consider it something of a shrine nonetheless. It is a wig that I imagined Dusty might wear. I've tried to paste the picture in below.

It has been on my desk all throughout the research and writing of the book. Like any shrine, I take all visitors to my house to see it. Some even have tried on the wig, but strangely, I have never done so. It's not quite like any of D's wigs but it's all I could find in New York.

I also have a large blow-up of the book cover that was given to me by the publisher, backed with styrofoam with a little stand-up thing. That's on the piano. I have stuck some badges on it saying "groovy" and "far out" but my favorite badge (which I think would make D laugh) says "Has a problem with authority."

Hope the image pastes in properly:

And the wig is fabulous! It looks a little like Dusty's Memphis hair where she looks slightly uncombed. Though that might have been her own hair.

I agree, Cas, it's so great that Wendy has the talent to draw Dusty so beautifully.

Yes, Cor, I think you're right about "Has a problem with authority"; it applies to me (actually, so much so that it should be on my gravestone) but also to Madame Dusty, just a little bit, don't you think? :) Ha!

D would love the flying money. Is that the same one that was being flung around the LTD party last year?

It's not the same monkey, but a close relative. They share the same talent for flying around randomly and forcefully. 🙄

Annie, Dusty was definitely a "free thinker" or she wouldn't have been able to live her life as she did, would she?

Oh, and could you please post a pic of your styrofoam book cover with the badges? I'd love to see that!

Thanks for the pic, Annie! "Far out", LOL!

Though I think Dusty did care a lot about what other people (her family, her peers, her fans, the church) thought of her, wouldn't you agree? She was a sucker for feedback and appreciation! But she still went her own way. Considering that her self-esteem often was somewhere around her ankles, that's pretty brave.

Heres a few bits and pieces I found lying around 😊 This doesnt include the two lovely drawings from wendy and the autograph from cas, all of which still need framing but as its the credit crunch and I REFUSE POINT BLANK to have crappy frames I have to wait a bit longer
