I'm a member that hasn't posted till now. Hello to all.

I do have a question for anyone that may know: As a child, Dusty Springfield was placed in one of those catholic "in care" homes/boarding schools. They were a front for child slavery and torture. The so called students were called inmates of all things.

Anyway, I was looking for the name of the institution if anyone knows and would care to share it. It's for my own information and will not be published in any way. I was in one as a child, myself and they pretty much ruined my life. I can understand why she did some of the things she did because of that background environment. There are lawsuits going on today for things that took place in those Hellholes all the way back before WWII in the UK. The one I went to was in California, U.S.A. in the 1950's. They have a strict statute of limitations of three years here. No exceptions
If any would care to share this info, I'd appreciate it. Thanks for your time.

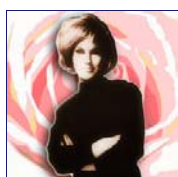

Regards,
Mike

Edited to add; if this is in the wrong place, please feel free to move it.
Thanks!

Mike, I know that Dusty went to at least one Catholic school--not sure if it was a boarding school though, and I've not heard of any of her experiences as even remotely similar to what you are describing. I'm sure we can get a fuller picture from one of our experts.

I'm truly sorry for your experience; it sounds terrible!

Mike, would you like to say where you got this information from? It doesn't appear in any of the Dusty bio's and I feel sure that if Dusty had told Vicki Wickham about bad school experiences, she would have used it to explain a few things in her book. Dusty's schools, as far as I'm aware are below and I don't believe she boarded at any of them. Also, having seen quite a few of Dusty's school reports, nothing seems out of order.

- Sands County Primary School (c 1945)
- St Augustines Elementary High Wycombe (c 1949)
- St Bernards Convent High Wycombe (c 1950)
- St Annes Convent Ealing (c 1951)

From a TV producer in the UK that knew her. It could be wrong(which is why I asked), of course, but the person knew her well and had no reason to lie.

Well, to be honest, I hoped that the information was wrong. Life is hard enough without the added burden of one of those places and PTSD from one always with you.

Thank you all for your time.
