The other day, I decided to try and order the above book which was mentioned in the Bulletin but backed off when I saw the price, which with postage was about $80. I thought I'd wait till it came out (hopefully) in paperback. I had a look around the author's website and found three Dusty shots that I hadn't seen before. There's also a little write up about the shot taken in the snow but I wasn't able to cut and paste it or copy the pics, which I did find on another Ian Wright site. Worth taking a look though, I love the shovelling snow one! The website is www.onthebrinkoffame.com should you want to look around or buy the book. You can find the write up under Excerpts from the book and then "unconventional divas", the snow photo comes up in the preview video.

There are four shots in the thumbnails.

Oh well done Frans 🙏 This new machine has still got me foxed, nothing seems as simple as it did before and even then, for me, it wasn't always simple! Did you notice Doug and Madeline on the schoolroom shot?

Fantastic--thanks Carole and Frans!

I can see an impish look in Dusty's eyes in that school photo. Who are the two to the left of her?

The birthday and the snow photos are also priceless.

This is the explanation given alongside the photo, doesn't explain who the other two people are though.

A local paper published a story claiming Dusty Springfield was making £1,000 a week, singing in a Stockton nightclub. At the Redcar grammar School, reporter Mike Hope and I watched spellbound as Dusty proceeded to give the sixth form a lesson in economics. At the end of her chalk scribbles, Dusty detailed how the £1,000 was divided up amongst her band, costumers, managers and entourage, proving beyond a shadow of a doubt that she was left with only a farthing per week, pocket money.

There's a definite twinkle in her eye 😊 a farthing! Yes, she does have a sheepish twinkle! Mind you, you could buy a car in those days with a farthing and still have change for a bag of chips..

The snow-shovelling and school room photos are priceless. Dusty, Dougie and Madeline look SO naughty. I think the man on the end is probably another teacher and maybe the woman is too, although she looks like a prototype for Dame Edna Everage (sorry!).

The picture of Dusty with cards and letters was apparently taken on her 27th birthday. She looks very happy with all her cards and letters - so she should, as 3 days later YDHTSYLM jumped from No4 to No1.

Just looking at one of my scrapbooks for April 19th 1966 - the Daily Express had her pictured at a chessboard with the headline "While relaxing over chess Queen Dusty Moves To No.1" and underneath "Then £30,000-a-Year Golden Voice Calls Three-Hour Strike". So, some discrepancy in the amount she might or thought she might be earning! It was still a lot of money for those days but Dusty of course mostly got her way. Who could resist?!!
