Thanks Carole. I love the way that Dusty acknowledges her backing singers with a little nod. She looked so lovely too. Shame that she never got to sing 'Mountain' with a singer worthy of both Dusty & the song!

Great utube find Carole! I have the entire programme on a DVD. It's from a was a Christmas Eve Special.

I remember watching a TV interview with Michael Ball, don't recall if it was just a utube clip or perhaps while we were still able to watch BBC TV or listen to BBC Radio on our computers in the US, Micheal said Dusty was extremely nervous before the show and he tried very hard to calm her down. He also said that sadly it was one of the last TV programmes she ever did and that he has always been a huge fan of Dusty's.

I sure wish they did a few more duets together.

Unfortunately, Michael Ball is only known to a limited audience in America. This ciip is how I first became aware of him. Isn't he fantastic? Well I sure think so. I've seen in on London's West End, playing Edna in Hairspray and the year prior I've seen him in concert in Blackpool.

Sadly when I was robbed in London last year, my camera was also taken with a great picture of Michael and myself taken in the camera :(I got to meet him at the stage door after seeing Hairspray. Told him that I came all the way from Florida to see him! He replied he was glad that I did! I don't think I'll ever fully get over not having that picture.

'95? Michael Ball makes reference to her illness and recovery....looking at her there, it's hard to believe she had just been through a horrendous course of hospital treatment....she looks utterly wonderful.

It was Christmas '95 Sue and Dusty did indeed look wonderful, quite beautiful really and although Roll Away wasn't live, the duet was, and she was in excellent voice. The cover of the final Bulletin was from this show and Paul also had other shots from the same show for sale.

Simon Bell once said that even when she was very ill, she still had beautiful skin. Thanks for posting this clip Carole - I love it, and think it confirms that her voice remained utterly spellbinding until the end - although like many clips from the last years of her life, I find it almost unbearably sad and moving to watch. It makes me very blue to think that so many of her contemporaries are still here and working, and she's gone.

It is incredibly sad, Rosie, and it makes listening to her last album, and a dream of an album, very, very upsetting. To think that she was so ill even while she was recording it. Sometimes i can listen to this album all the way through, other times, like last time...i had to turn it off for a while....

I wonder how many of her contemporaries will have websites like this, and others, dedicated to them.

Sue, I have a rule that I can't listen to A Very Fine Love late at night - I just can't go to bed feeling that sad!

I'm going to correct myself here and say the Bulletin cover was probably not from Michael Ball show but from Des O'Connor, they were recorded very close together. She wore the same outfit for both but her hair was slightly different and you know how I am about hair-do's!

This is definitely from the Michael Ball Show 😊 its a great show and Michael is a nice bloke. you could see how much respect he had for her. his radio 2 show on Sunday morning is a good show and he is really natural with the public on the phone in parts. I bet Marty that if you wrote to him on the radio 2 website that he would send you a signed pic.

Your right Humboldt, and I still do have Michael's autograph when he signed my programme.
