I will be lighting candles too.

Will anyone be able to go to Henley on the day? If so, I would like to contribute to some special flowers.

For Dusty ..

Time paused for a moment.
Between two heartbeats, you were gone.
In that instant, all was different.
You were gone.

The sun shone still. But not for me.
Stars sparkled still, dimmer somehow.
The world spun with graceful sorrow.
Because you were gone.

A Queen spoke of sadness
While crowds waited with tears.
For me, all that mattered was that
You were gone.

Flowers spelled your name
And from the Cliffs of Moher
You danced upon the wind.
Forever, you were gone.

But your voice echoes now,
Alive, shimmering perfection.
Resonating in my soul.
You are not gone at all.

The moments become one
And in them, you soar,
Forever iconic.
In them, legendary.

A heart holds the memory of you,
A soul clasps you with joy
While tears fall like diamonds.
But you have not gone.

Forever with us,
Our Dusty.

Dusty is in my thoughts every day and even though I'll be away on holiday on 2nd March, it'll still be the same. This is the little church in L which has had many a candle lit for Dusty at this time.

I will always remember where I was when Dusty died - it was a very happy occasion for a friend - the 2nd March was her 50th birthday and away for a few days celebrating her birthday, but the actual day was tinged with sadness as I heard the announcement on the radio news. I have got to the funeral but I couldn't get time off work at such short notice as I had just had those few days holiday. Will be thinking of D all the pleasure she has brought to all of us through her music and being a thoroughly lovely lady! Your poem was lovely too Will - I don't think I could ever imagine how much impact she has had on all of us, I think through her own insecurity she probably felt insignificant at times - if I really knew how much she was loved.

When I visited Dusty's marker for the first time, I left a letter for her saying I hoped that she now realized how much she was loved.

more than enough to last my whole life though...

I'll be en route next Sunday (travelling back home from Aland where I am right now), but I'll take a few silent moments on the ferry, looking out at the sea. A sad day indeed, but Dusty was at last relieved from her pain.

Lovely sentiments, Will.

Pondering what would happen if Dusty were back for just one more day ..

One More Day

One more day is all it takes
This shy girl is among you again
Smiling. Tears sparkling.

One more day and I am among friends.
Songs echoing through the years,
Laughter filling the room.

Friends gather round, young and old,
Hugging and laughing -
Nicholas in my arms.

A rose from Simon, guitar from Tom
A lyric from Carol

Sing of love and joy

This girl is happy now
Secure in your hearts -
And I know you have loved me.

I decided on the spur of the moment to go and say hello to Dusty today. I nearly changed my mind after being stuck in a jam on the North hour! However, I eventually got there. Some of the flowers had blown over and there had clearly been a bit of a storm recently. I popped in Marys to light a candle for Dusty and when I came out I met Trudy who had brought some flowers. She said that she visits regularly to add flowers and keep everything looking nice.

We decided that more flowers were needed so we popped into the local Waitrose. Not a great choice, but we stocked up with fresasias and daffodils. Here are a few photos.

How lovely all the flowers are on Dusty's marker. Her simple marker with all the flowers around is much more beautiful than all the large elaborate ones to be seen in the photo. Thanks Pat for making the trip and posting such lovely photos and thanks also to Trudy for remembering Dust and freesias are lovely spring flowers, and the smell of freesias is just divine.

I presume that the flowers on the left of the photo are from the florist and represent some beautiful and unusual flowers. The wonderful spiky ones are called sea holly and that blue is natural in them and I see they are combined with Irises, my favourite flower. I think the florist is doing it well. It is nice to see that included with the florist's flowers and a beautiful little bunch of flowers in the front are some grey leafed eucalypts (gum trees) representing Oz!

A million times we've needed you, a million times we've cried.

Wonderful poem, Bev. I'm sure you know it is how we all feel! \misty

Posted - 03/03/2008 : 03:27:17

I feel especially good about that, Bev, as a friend just told me a few hours ago that her cat had to be put down today. She was 20 years old.

I am 14 years old and am a huge fan of Dusty Springfield, I listen to her music everyday. I like her so much that i even set up a group just Bebo.

I want everyone to remember her and to remember her music, as it seems to have been overtaken by modern music like hip hop and rap.

I was wondering, if you knew if there was anything i could do to sort of advertise this bebo group, or anyway i could honour dusty, because she is the best, and i want people to remember her, and i would do anything to do this.

Have you got any ideas on what i could do?

Thankyou so much.
