No you haven't Cas, it's on till 5.00pm and Dusty hasn't been featured yet. But, if by the time you see this you really have missed it, it will be online via BBC Radio 2 site later.

finally played IOWTBWY at 4-40pm and that was because a "Dave from N IRELAND" who asked for the " exquisite Dusty Springfield" I dont think Cilla and her ego would have picked her otherwise as she chose everyone else until then as her stand up girl singers. I think she always seems a bit reluctant to acknowledge the superiority of Dusty and her talent compared to her good fortune at being in the Epstein stable !! she can say she had as many hits as she likes but Dusty was and always will be far superior and was modest too unlike Miss Black who just loves herself.

Yes. we really did have to wait for IOWTBWY, Was hoping we'd get more. thank goodness for Dave . Cilla never had what Dusty had, and why couldn't she pick her as one of her three choices ? she was quite nice about her at the start of the programme, so was "wishing and hoping " we'd hear more but.....we all know who was the better 60's singer with talent don't we ?

It was a great programme. Tony Blackburn was far more interesting than Cilla though, telling stories of what actually happened in the sixties. Cilla on the other hand - just 'name-dropped'. When asked by Tony why she 'gave up' singing in the 70's she had the cheek to say she 'knew' she would be popular on tv!. Why didn't she say she'd lost her voice and people didn't care to hear her sing anymore!

Saying that, you sort of have to admire her - she's stretched a 5 year singing career into a 45 year 'personality' career. Keep with Paul O'Grady, Dale & Biggins kid - you need them - as much as they need you!.

Cilla spoiled the programme for me, just like Lulu, she brings herself into every conversation and it quickly grates. She just never stopped talking about herself and I felt Tony Blackburn wanted to say that Dusty was our best female singer ever, but was skirting around offending Cilla. Best he could do was to call Dusty our best ever soul singer.
