We used to have a thread on this album...looks like it's been archived, though. I really like AGCD. It's a mixed bag, musically, but Miss Dusty tackles everything with the same enthusiasm and energy that I feel from 'I Only Want to be with You'. Still sounds classy, 45 years on!

As you know, I only received the album very recently and I have to say I love it! Currently, 'Summer Is Over' is one of my favourite tracks - love those lyrics!

As it was her first solo album, I've always loved the attack and the boldness. And her voice just makes me happy! :)

Back in '64 this album was way ahead of it's time for a British girl singer...and it still is!
'Summer is over' is my favourite Dusty track OF ALL TIME 🎧🎧

I remember my mother buying me AGCD when it first came out when I was a teenager.!!! (Such a long time ago) .I was astonished, amazed by this extraordinary voice coming out of my record player.Dusty!! I think I played Will You Still Love Me Tomorrow about 5 times in a row until my parents begged me to stop.!!

Inspired by Will's thread, I was listening to this in the car today, trying to imagine what it must have been like to buy this album in 1964, with only The Springfields as a Dusty reference, and with no idea of what recording delights would come in the future. It must have been so exciting.

If I've been listening to Dusty's later albums for a long time, I like to go straight back to this album - back to the beginning. I always find it really uplifting.

Hi Chris 😊

I remember begging my Mum to buy me a David Bowie album (Hunky Dory). She didn't 😞 You were lucky and I love your memories. Even now this album is such a rush of amazing new energy. It's a true ground breaker. I would have played 'Will You Still Love Me' 5 times too. In fact I probably did last year when I finally listened properly courtesy of Carole G and Taylor. 😊

Lately, I've really grown to LOVE 'You Don't Own Me'. I can totally see it as a single back in the day. Wonder why it wasn't.

Maybe because it was Leslie Gore's hit. These were the days when albums didn't necessarily include singles. Singles were considered separately. You can notice this distinction on most of Dusty's albums until DIM.

She hit the sixties with that raw, snap, crackle and pop sound, absolutely sensational, the whole album is amazing and it stayed in the charts for nearly six months!!!!!! 🎧 I'm off to play it, right NOW.

I think it hit #6, so did ECUD. That was the highest chart placing for any of her studio albums.

Well, to be truthful, the Paul Howes Dusty bible says 23 weeks, so that's pretty near to six months, oh to have been a teenager back then! 🙄

Well Sue I was a teenager then and it was great to be around for her then. I think that's why my favourite songs and look for Dusty was from that time.

on the downside it means I am now ancient and as Bette Davis said "old age aint no place for Cissies"

You know, Liz, i hate to admit this, but the early Dusty is also my favourite, but i still think she looked lovely in later years too, some of my favourite albums are the early ones, whether they got high up the charts or not, did you ever get to see her on stage, or get her autograph, Liz?

The thing that really amazes me about AGCD is that she released it right in the middle of Beatle-mania, almost like someone opening a magic door, out steps Dusty and..... hey look you guys, you aint seen nothing yet!

I enjoyed reading that, Sue. This is why a movie from someone like Michael Cunningham [the guy who was supposed to be writing Nicole Kidman's Dusty movie] could be so interesting and important. He places Dusty's importance alongside the Beatles and the Stones. This re-positioning hasn't been done in any depth yet..in the books or the documentaries as far as I remember.

What I'd like, if original fans were up for it, would be a session where we could just listen to these great stories about Dusty opening the 'magic door' and listen to you all discuss your own early Dusty memories and experiences. A bit like Tea with Dusty but 100 times better. And priceless. 😊😊😊 Perhaps a special dinner or lunch around the next DD? Something to think about maybe...

Well Sue as you are new to the site you havent seen my previous sites comments on seeing Dusty etc. I know a few on the site know my tale of woe re autograph and pics etc of her. I saw her 5 times and she has always been my top girl. I had a huge collection of pics,show ticket stubs and autograph plus all the press cuttings but lost them all when my parents were moving house and burnt all the stuff in the loft!! yes you guessed it all my Dusty stuff and all my O level school artwork. I got over the artwork but the Dusty stuff was heartbreaking to lose. my Father didnt think I would want all the stored things as I was living in the nurses home of the Hospital I worked in.I have tried to get her autograph since but havent had any luck. I have been able to get lots of the pics again as the lovely people on here have posted so much. glad you are posting and you will love the site its full of real characters and interesting topics.

Liz, your story is similar to mine. I had just about everything in the sixties, books of cuttings, autographed photo's and posters and programmes. They were at my parents house when I moved out and I left them there, just taking my records and personal photo's. Lucky for me that I did take those as my parents died within two years of each other in the 70's and the house got cleared without me even thinking about my collection. I do still have a few autographs, on the back of photo's, but I'd give anything to have all my other stuff back. I did start collecting again later, and have folders full of stuff, but I'd give a lot to get the originals back. A Girl Called Dusty was never off my record player when it first came out, I loved it then and I love it now. She didn't arrive with a whimper 😊 well Carole I know others on here are envious that we did see her in action and thats true. but I still feel bereft that I lost all that great stuff. we were lucky though and for me as I get older and more nostalgic, she becomes more and more important to me. I think she just helps take me back to those times and as said by Sue the fact that she was so dominant then even with the Beatles etc shows how good she was. I always love it that other artists at the time seem to revere her the most. she was wonderful.

we will just have to manage with what we have now. I know you have great memories of her and I envy the times you saw her etc. I hate being this age but I love it that we were there to see the great lady at her best.xx

Memphis, with re' the film, i made some enquiries about this, because last year there was a lot of talk and excitement, however, i've been told that they have yet to write the script/story so the film is quite a way off. The idea of a tea with Dusty is great, if others are interested, so am i.....?

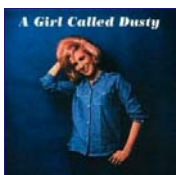

Liz, what a horrendous story, i would have felt positively suicidal! Did you ever forgive your parents? But, and small consolation, at least you still have happy memories. I'm having a great time looking round the site, as i work shifts, nights mainly, i can't spend as much time as i'd like to on here, no matter, this is one of the best, if not THE best sites there are around.

Carole, your's too is a heartbreaking story, heck, what awful stories you both have, but, at least you managed to save some of it, and it has to be said, no, she didn't come in with a whimper....more like a bldy great explosion! Okay, so she didn't rocket up to no.1, but life was never the same since.

I dont think my Father cared really one way or the other ,he used to sell stuff and tell us after that he had done it and he sold all his tools one day(he was a cabinet maker) to a man he met and didnt tell any of us til they were gone!! I could tell you some tales but this would go on forever and not that interesting to anyone else.I went mad about my stuff at the time but it was too late anyway so what can you do/ as said before at least I had them. poor Carole she lost all that memorabilia too so she is remarkable to have so much info etc still on Dusty. glad you are enjoying the chats on here,its a great place.
