Re: Articles and bits from my paper files. (#p151110)

by Tom Lovett » Tue Apr 15, 2014 11:17 am

I found the following Tribute to Dusty by Judith Durham (Lead Singer of The Seekers) written just after Dusty's death My copy is barely legible so I've taken the liberty of typing it. I seem to recall the tribute appeared in a Judith' Fan Club Newsletter.

DUSTY SPRINGFIELD

1939 - 1999

A tribute by Judith Durham

Dusty Springfield - my contemporary

With the sad and untimely death of Dusty Springfield the world has lost a great artist, as someone with an irrepressible and zany sense of humour, according to her Brother Tom. When I phoned him recently they were planning an Irish wake to give her a big send off.

Dusty had taste in music. She really challenged the mould of the female singing styles in the UK in the 60s, and I remember how the music papers frequently spoke of her passion for black American artists such as Martha and the Vandellas and Marvin Gaye. I marvelled at her knowledge of such artists and wished I could have that. I wished I could be slim and hip like her too.

If only I had known that Dusty was a tormented soul - full of insecurities like me It turned out that we had so much in common. How I wish I had been able to have a real heart to heart with her, and could have known that she literally reinvented herself into the glamorous trendy image we all knew. But we were both shy people - and I never would have dared to have approached her even though she once send me a card out of the blue when I was hospitalised.

The public would hear bizarre stories of how Dusty never removed her mascara simply layering one coating over the one before - but she was certainly my role model for eye make-up. And we would hear disparaging comments about what a perfectionist she was in the studio - but I admired her that too and always will.

I was lucky that Tom wrote songs with my voice in mind after their group - The Springfields - broke up, it's funny to think, theoretically, had they not split up when they did and The Seekers not arrived in the UK at that time, I'll Never Find Another You and all our hits that followed may have indeed been vehicles for Dusty's voice in the leading role of The Springfields.

I was in awe of Dusty - she was the epitome of everything I aspired to as a singer and stage artist. Her voice had the sense of belonging - a soul crying - and her choice of material combined with her professionalism meant her recordings transcended fashions.

Long may they be enjoyed and treasured as they live on in our record collections.

Ever able to see the lighter side of a bad situation, it was good to see Dusty returned home from S.Africa dressed in a beige suit with coffee/brown blouse. I wonder what she thought when Mandela was released in 1990 - seeing her quote, at a later date, that the situation would never be resolved in her lifetime. Maybe she made people more aware, who knows.

I guess the headlines of the time at the very least made the British public aware of the situation in South Africa, where otherwise they might not have been Pat. 🙄 And Dusty's integrity meant that she could look at herself in the mirror, 🙄 while the likes of Max Bygraves and Derek Nimmo were more worried about lining their pockets. 🙄
