I wonder if the fact that Dusty withdrew from performing at the Oscar show subsequently led to "Look of love" not winning ,best song. I always thought it strange that "Talk to the animals" won that year.

I am a bit confused as she attended an Oscar night with Burt, was it that year? I think it was the time when it was the nearest she ever got to being Mrs B as the name cards on the table said Mr & Mrs Bacharach. Maybe that was a Grammy night, as I say I'm confused..

I'm sure I remember Evelyn Stalley as being a Dusty fan and she does give Dusty the best voice but as for the best personality, I guess that depends on taste and I know where my vote went 😊 The photo of Dusty and Cilla is a good indication of how tall Cilla was compared to Dusty. A couple of people have to said to me recently that they thought they were the same height.

Totally agree Trek 🤔 I think this has been commented on before and discussed elsewhere but in cutting 3 it says DIM reached Number 15 in the UK Album Charts on original release, so it must have sold a few thousand copies??? and been a reasonable if not major success- only not in The States- only reaching Number 99 In the US Charts. Biographies and other books and TV programmes all seem to agree that DIM was a complete commercial failure, or are they just stating that with songs that Good, Dusty at her peak, with one of the best productions teams going and Fantastic reviews that DIM should have done so much better commercially ?

Re: Articles and bits from my paper files. (#p160462)

Dusty In Memphis was an unfortunate victim of circumstance.

Up until February 1969 the Record Retailer published a list of the best-selling 50 albums. From then on the British Market Research (BMRB) drew up the charts for the UK record industry and the BBC with these charts becoming known as the official charts.

For some time after it was appointed BMRB only drew up a chart of the Top 15 best-selling full-price albums. This was the period in which DIM was issued. Because of the limit on the album chart to 15, DIM has been regarded as a great failure, whereas if there had been a Top 50 published, it might have been regarded as moderately successful. As Darren's posting shows, DIM got to No 15 in the NME album chart, which tends to support this view.

Another, albeit small, factor was that DIM was issued three months earlier in the US than it was in the UK and UK mail-order specialists were offering US copies for sale very soon after the US release date. Adverts for it appeared in the NME and other music papers. I bought a US copy in this way and I can't have been the only older fan to have done so. What the impact was on sales of the UK release, we can only speculate. In those days I certainly couldn't afford to buy both the US and UK versions.

Sorry if this has been asked before, but would some of you fans with clippings tell us the story of how you got them? I know Cas has them from scrapbooks she kept back in the day, but what about yours, Darren, and what's the story of your latest acquisitions, Carole? And others who may want to share.

In any case, they are such a wonderful mirror on Dusty's world, through the lens of the press. Did Dusty have a press agent or publicist?

Dusty initially used The Springfields' publicist Keith Goodwin, then he turned her over to his associate - a very young Mike Gill.

Pat contacted me a while back to say a lady who lives about an hour away from me wanted to donate her scrap books to the DD auction and I drove over last weekend to collect them. There are five books but even more loose cuttings, hopefully they will go as one lot at DD.

Mike Gill had his work cut out protecting Dusty through many years and I know from a friend of his that he loved Dusty till the day he died in 2004. He was responsible for the release of so much of Dusty's back catalogue that we now have on CD and DVD.

It's depressing to read about the failure of the tour. Less than 500 people at one of the concerts had to hurt her confidence. Does anyone know what was meant by the remark things were unorganised on and off the tour? Why did it fail so badly? I'm assuming the college concert dates never happened. Boy, 1969 was not a good year for her, was it. I mean that with DIM not getting the sales it deserved and then the failed tour it's no wonder she was at times depressed. Any ideas as far as what went wrong? 🙄

I remember going to my first concert in 1969. It was at a local college ... Jefferson Airplane with Grace Slick performed. I was quite young at the time. The smell of pot filled the room. Every 5 mins a joint passed by. I was in awe. Times were definitely changing. I can't imagine Dusty performing in a setting like this. Of course, this was just my experience and maybe it was different at other colleges. I think Dusty, given the proper venue, would have been successful. Just my opinion though.

Don't know about the specific reasons for the failure of the tour, but maybe it was due to bad-management, not knowing what was best for Dusty. 🤔 😞
