I've got a good thing

Hi everyone!, after visiting the British Museum 'Terracotta army' exhibition Barbara and I decided to pay a visit to Aubrey Walk, it was Barbara's first time to a Dusty residence.

Here's a few pics (and some of the locality), not too sure what's happening with no.38, someone has been inside and pulled the Blind down in the front window, and there is a Car parked right outside, but there seemed to be quite a bit of junk mail and free Newspapers posted!

When I've visited previously I didn't seem to notice the Victorian Street lamps along Aubrey Walk, on closer inspection there are small ventilation holes so they would have been Gas lit when first erected, this one is opposite Dusty's house.....

I guess this enamel Street plaque is pre World War II, well, whenever it was placed there Dusty would have walked passed it, and that's what matters!

Barbara gettin' her breath back after walking up Campden Hill

More survivors from the Victorian era!.....it really is an Oasis of calm in Aubrey Walk, considering all the hustle and bustle of Notting Hill Gate and the Portobello Market just down the Hill!

Walked back down to the Main road the 'steep' way!

This Lamp could do with fixin'!

Anyone planning a walking visit, don't walk 'up' Aubrey Road, walk up Campden Hill, Aubrey Road will wear you out!

Thanks for that picture update, Mark! The area is so charming.

I wonder who bought Dusty's old house. I know I'd restore it to what it looked like when Dusty lived there, and would have endless Dusty parties and Dusty Days, if I was the buyer!!! 😊

Me too Cas! 🙏 Thanks for the information and photos Mark, very good to know that there's a better way to Dusty's house than walking up Aubrey Road! 😊

great pics Mark...and yes, nothing like green but I think you get a chance to see more in the winter..at least, I got a better view w/o all the Wisteria and maybe that's why you noticed the lamp, Mark.
It is a charming neighborhood and maybe we should just can all the charities and put all our money in one big pot towards the purchase for Aubrey Walk.😄...Cor, you will have to be the hostess for the grand opening.😄

Thank you Paula!.....I guess all the foilage from Summertime made me miss the old Lamps as I'm into old and rare street furniture like ancient Mailboxes, etc!

I'm sure no.38 would be full of fun if all us fans clubbed together and bought it!.....ah well, in our Dreams I guess!!🤔🤔

We'd have to adjust the price for raffle tix a little bit, I guess!🤔

Well, we can dream, can't we!🤔

What a fantastic idea Paula. Let's go for it, put the raffle tickets up.

Great pictures Mark. Thanks for sharing.

I'm with Paula - we could just buy it and show up for the parties and Dusty Days. Nice of Cor to suggest and play hostess.🤔

I would like to open the museum there, but might as well be on the moon...moon might be cheaper than London.

Great pictures, Mark. I bet if you wrote down the number of trips great and small you and B. have taken it would fill a book! It's been some years since I went there and as we schleped all over kingdom come that day, so I forget just which hikes were the worst. Thanks for the tip about which road to take up...in case I make it back there.

Thanks for those wonderful photos Mark. At least you can see Dustys plaque now. When I visited Aubrey Walk in early December it was totally obscured by the wisteria?!!
