Yes, she owned a pink Jensen Interceptor, not sure what year sometime early 70s. She also owned a Buick Riviera early on in the 60s, I think it was a 64. (My dad owned a 68) Also in one of the interviews for It Begins Again in 78, the interviewer talks about walking Dusty to her car after a lunch interview and the car was a Mercedes. In around 1989/90 there is comment that Dusty has a new car (in England) but I don't know what make or model it was. Anyway there's a skeleton, anyone like to flesh it out!

I think she had a mini cooper also, or at least drove one.

She also had a couple of old 'beaters' during the lean years.

This is Dusty's Buick (and me) from 1966.

She also owned a Fiat 130 Coupe, probably early 70's....

In saloon form, the 130 had been around since 1969, a formal dignified vehicle for high-ranking members of the Italian church and state. It was big and imposing and looked like the progeny of a one-night stand between a ZIL and a Mercedes 600, but it wasn't much fancied outside of the Italian market. A glamorous coupe sister model, Fiat hoped, would raise its game.

Launched in 1971, the 130 Coupe was sold for six years with 5000 produced, but not even the patronage of glamorous celebs such as Sophia Loren, Marcello Mastroianni and Dusty Springfield (hers had gold-plated door handles) could raise its profile in a market dominated by more aristocratic badges.

In a sense there was nothing dramatic or radical about the 130 Coupe. It was merely a sober, exquisitely-proportioned large two-door car, a fusion of gentle nuance and suggestion, presence, poise and dignity.

Thanks for all your info!

Anyone know anything about this one?

"Dusty visited her parents in Hove as often as she could. We have an eyewitness account of Dusty arriving in Wilbury Road in a pink Thunderbird with a black girlfriend. In 1964 she told the Argus that her mum was still fussing over her: "Mum doesn't think I get enough sleep. I don't but I live."

"But I love singing... either that or I'm completely crazy."
