Hi Gang!

I've noticed on a couple of Dusty recordings that it sounds as though she has a problem with words ending in "st." I've heard she had a lisp but I never picked up on that in her interviews. I know she suffered an injury involving her front teeth. I've even heard people say that it is very prominent in a couple of her songs. Is she referring to this in one of the lines in "Soft Core?" "I've been inflicted with a lot of pain, you "SEE?"

.....and my beautiful soul is weeping. xo

Love,
Leigh

Hello Leigh...Can't say that I have ever been as enamoured with ones speaking voice as much as Dusty's. I believe that through the years , you can hear changes Dusty made in the way she sang some songs..ie breathier vocals, treble, accents...but don't believe it was due to any affliction.

Dusty did not write 'Soft Core'..she sang it...in the cabaret kind of style it was written. She did not write most of what she sang and I guess it will always be up to the listener how they want to interpret it. 😊

Hi Snowbird 😊

If you look at Sarah's great 'frozen' shots you can see Dusty's natural teeth in many shots. In one of the most recent interviews that Carole posted here (the short rushed one) Dusty's teeth look discolored. By the time of her successful come back with the Pet Shop Boys she has different teeth (one reason why I could hardly recognise her in the 'What Have I Done To Deserve This' video). So like many celebrities she had her teeth 'done' and maybe more than once because her teeth look better in later videos. They must be where that lisping sound comes from.
