Imagine my surprise when logging into YouTube yesterday to be informed that my video for Dusty Day 2008 has been pulled, because I had used 'How Can I Be Sure' in the soundtrack!

Clearly the scallywags didn't like the video - if they'd watched the whole thing they would have heard the other two tracks as well lol..

Quite a few Dusty vids have been pulled due to copyright claims. We'd all better enjoy them while we can.

Why don't you just upload it again, Will? Or let someone else do it for you...

Well Frans, I can't deny that that thought has occurred to me ;)

I would suggest, in light of the numerous fab Dusty vids that are still there at the moment, that it might be an idea for people to perhaps consider downloading the ones they really want, in case they do all disappear in the next wee while. I'd already saved millions of them (well, quite a lot, anyway) and now I am so glad that I did.

I thought I read in the last Bulletin that Miss Dusty's catalogue would be entering the public domain in a few years' time. Could anyone post videos or use the songs then?

Yes that's very true, Tim - and got rather a lot of views, too, so spreading the Dusty word a little more, hopefully :)

I have noticed that a lot of videos have been pulled on You Tube lately..quite a with the video remaining but no audio.

I've had a few videos pulled lately too.

Personally I feel absolutely terrible at the thought that my callous decision to use 30 seconds of an R.E.M. song in a freely accessible video may have caused some of the multimillionaires at Warner Music Group to quite literally starve to death.

A moment of silence for them all.

Be warned, ladles and jellypoos - this year I am coming ARMED. None of your Canon G9 malarkey (although it was more than capable last year); time for the big guns, so I shall bring down my Canon 5D and then Rob and I can compare lenses :)

And there is the sniff of a new video in the air, methinks ;)
