It's going to be a good weekend down here in the South East, time to prune the roses. As I sat with my cup of coffee wondering whether to try and find my secateurs I received an email from www.rosebuddies.com offering a discount on bare root roses.

Why am I rambling on you might ask, well these people can supply the Dusty Springfield Rose at a cost of £6.95 each plus carriage, £1 for each rose purchased is donated to the Royal Marsden Hospital.

Happy gardening

Tom

Thank you Tom, I may see if the lads will buy me one for Mothers Day to go with the one I already have.

Thanks Tom for the info..I've been going to buy 1 for ages.
So I've just sent in an order. 😊

I would love to plant one or two Dusty Springfield Roses in my garden, but they are not sold in Oz. I have recently planted a beautiful apricot rose called San Remo Forever so that will have to do. 😊

DUSTY AT NUMBER 1 AGAIN

That is according to Rosebuddies! The company who supplies the DUSTY SPRINGFIELD rose.
They rang me yesterday regarding my purchase (they'd lost my credit card details!), and the lady I spoke to asked me why I'd ordered this particular rose?. I explained it was the 10th anniversary of her death, and she said "That explains it then!"..."we have sold more of this rose than any other during the last week" 🙏

I wonder if there's a 'sweet-pea' chart?

Brian in the garden.

P.S - rose arrived today, and is already planted

Thats good news Tom because the Marsden will benifit too. We have sent off for one, and Dene hopes it will arrive in time for Mothers Day.

My rose arrived today too...and I've planted it..we must have been digging together Brian!! 😊

I'm growing some Dusty sweet peas again this year too.

I hope I will have flowers to post on the site later in the year. 😊

Good luck with all your roses, folks.

And if anyone could pick up some extra sweet pea packages, I'll happily buy them off you on the day. Not that I would smuggle them into the US or anything.

I bought my sweet peas from Unwins last year, but they don't seem to have any advertised this year.
