Don't know 'bout anyone else, but the idea of Dusty reaching 70yrs of age is mind blowing to me..

If she'd still been alive how d'ya think she would have felt about it? and I wonder what she would have looked like..

I also wonder if she would lost her crazy ways and gone 'all sensible and staid'.. Hope not.

None of us knows, but, what d'ya think?..

I think she'd stay pretty much out of the public eye, to be honest. I think her "crazy ways" may have been toned down a bit, but she'd still be herself.

Happy Birthday in a few weeks, Miss Dusty!!

There are still many 'crazy' women around of 70+ (I know at least 3!) Dusty I'd like to think would be one of them.

I wonder if she'd enjoy all the new technology? Like making phone calls and sending texts in her car while waiting for the lights to turn green on Hart Street. Or facebooking and myspacing like crazy with her buddies all over the globe. Posting pictures of her cats all over this forum (preferably in the wrong sections! LOL!!).

I guess she'd also enjoy the cheap flights, and escape Henley frequently.

And like Taylor, I guess she'd prefer to stay out of the limelight. Or could you see her in a "You're worth it" commercial???

Dusty's hell raising days were over long before she died. I think that she was at peace with herself at last. At 70 I think that she'd be living a quiet but happy life and perhaps making the odd guest appearance on chat shows. I doubt if she'd still be singing but then who really knows that answer.

Just having her around would be really great. And I wouldn't be a bit surprised if her singing would still be great!

I think she'd be out of the limelight, live a quite life in henley with the cats. Make the odd appearance here and there, I can just imagine her walking down the high street, trying to text or something like that! Hopefully she would still be a little crazy, have that same wacky personality. Would have been great if we all got a chance to meet her too, if she were still here with us. We will unfortunately, never know...

I think Dusty would still have her beautiful, endless sense of wit. I think, later on, she discovered that laughter and peace do contribute a great deal to the meaning of life. I would also imagine that she would show up occasionally on talk shows. Mostly, I imagine her writing her autobiography. From what I could pick up from Dusty was that she was trying say something. She was shy, so she tried to communicate her feelings through song. She would have made a wonderful teacher - passionate, intellegent, believer in all things good - especially love.

That one true love. Did she ever find it?

There are so many songs for me that won't be song...
