Dusty's I Will Always Want You (#p17229)

by pandy063 » Sun May 02, 2010 3:14 pm

One of the four CDs of Simply Dusty has the song "I will always want you" which was originally modified from an Italian song she picked up in San Remo in the 60s. My question is - does anyone else just adore this song by Dusty like I do?

If I could find it on You Tube I would post it here, but I just cannot find it anywhere.

I wanted to share a version of it with one of my co-workers last week although I couldn't find it on the internet.

 The arrangement, strings and of course Dusty's voice are so rich on this one. Play it loud!

Oh YES! I do adore it too!

But I actually prefer the Italian version! I don't speak Italian, but to me, Dusty sounds so DRAMATIC, even better than on the English version. It's called Di Fronte All'Amore.

Here it is (the last few seconds of the dramatic ending are missing, duh!)

Yes the italian version [translation for this " Faced with love "] far more dramatic, love this too , often wonder why they gave the song a different title for the english version.

I love this song and agree that the Italian version is better - has more oomph 🎵

😊 I love the English version and I am aware of the Italian version of course. Great you posted it.

They are both dramatic in delivery. 🌟

Can any one post (gentle challenge here) the English version on this forum? 🤔

I just cannot find a video of it.

I am recruiting yet another Dusty fan at the office, I hope.

Marea, 'The Corrupt Ones' is a song Miss Dusty sang for a movie called "Peking Medallion" in the UK (in the US the movie is just called "The Corrupt Ones"). It's on very few CDs...Classics and Collectibles is the easiest to find it on, and it's also on Dusty Springfield Anthology (a US only release).

And as for the song...it's a real belter isn't it? I LOVE both versions. I like the faster pacing of the music and anguish and melodrama of her voice in 'DiFronte All'Amore', but prefer the emotional punch of the English lyrics.

Liz, I have always thought that the melodies running through 'Corrupt' & 'Summer' are similar. 😊
