i just saw this on eBay:

http://cgi.ebay.com/Pop-Singer-DUSTY-SPRINGFIELD-Owned-Brooch_W0QQitemZ120056594463QQihZ002QQcategoryZ60345QQrdZ1QQcmdZViewItem

do you think it was really hers, or is it a fake?

Well it sure beats the phone bill any day.. although the seller does claim to have a letter - what would be good would be a photo of Dusty wearing it. Still there sounds like additional auction documentation.

There's a late 70's picture of Dusty in London I think pointing at Lulu and laughing (not surprisingly given Lulu's awful hair) She was wearing a velvety top and had a pendant which although not this was in a similar style.

This reminds me almost of the Tiffany lampshades - art nouveau etc, I would think it very possibly genuine. Proof of course is another matter. What sayeth the resident wardrobe experts such as Carole?

Maybe someone remembers Dusty wearing it?

It doesn't ring any Dusty bells right away and I can't check through pics in my books at the moment as I don't have them. As it's being sold from America, it could be something that we never got to see over here, though there were similar items being sold at the Sotheby's auction. If they have proof of its authenticity, I wonder if it was even sold at Sotheby's and is now being sold on again. Everything from there had a guarantee with it but other than that, I don't know what kind of proof they would have.

Maybe the time of 'Sometimes Like Butterflies'

I don't think it was a present from Peter Stringfellow.

Just guessing

I don't wanna be a downer on the party but its easy to have a brooch and chuck it up on e-bay and claim it belonged to someone famous. Maybe im just anti-ebay lol but i always wonder about these things.

But then again, it may be real.

That Brooch looks really cute! Kinda Dustyish as its ornate.

Love, Laura xx

It does say it comes with a letter of authenticity; someone could write and ask about its provenance, if interested in buying it.

I'd like to know how they could prove it was Dusty's 😊
