Sue.

SUE!

Heavens!

Have I somehow missed your previous references to this?! Do you own Dusty's pink blouse?! I've just fallen off my chair.

Sorry.

Yep!...Thats the very same one I saw at Dusty Day...😞😞

I was within arms length of it, Rosie!...😞

Thanks Sue.😞

Like Rosie, I also obviously missed the first references to this blouse. From Carole R's post I am assuming you won it at the Dusty Day Auct

When I first opened the thread I thought it was something that was sold on ebay. Although I have never seen a picture of Dusty wearing t thought to myself, hmmm now that looks authentic! I certainly can see her wearing it.😞 So much I've seen on ebay just never looked aut me.😞😞

Sue please tell us about the blouse and thanks for posting the great pictures!😞

thanks for showing your very expensive Sunday purchase Sue!! I was there, amazed at the bidding and wishing I could buy the leather Jac Bobbie got. you are one lucky girl but all credit to you for your bid as you have contributed so much to the Fund.

I have read quite a bit of the stuff on Dusty Day Will, but I think I must have missed this somehow!

Someone's going to have to sit next to me and hold my hand during the auction at Dusty Day next year. I will by then be a full time postgr not a bean to spend. I imagine it will be torture seeing such wonders being paraded in front of me.😞

Just gorgeous, Sue, congratulations again!

What does the label say? What is the fabric content? Where was it made? What size is it?

Hi everyone, and thank you for your comments and interest 😊😊

More info' on the blouse: The label says 'Alice Pollock' of London, the fabric looks smooth in the photo's, but there's a very slightly rough feel sure what it's called. There's no size label, but, Dusty must have been tiny, i imagine about size 8-10.

For those of you who were not at Dusty Day 09.....that's where it happened.....and i still can't believe that it did !!!!!!!

It's an honour and a privilege to be this close to something she touched and wore, an incredible feeling that i cannot describe properly, but certain, i would not part with it for the world, or ANY amount of money in the world, EVER!! I would rather live on bread and water for life..

Glad you like it, thanks 😊😊

You are all mistaken, and thus I shall have to intervene and stop this squabbling! The true version of events goes like this. Dusty and I wer vodka and throwing cakes at one of her famous Baker Street parties. The dress she was wearing took a direct hit from a raspbery pavlova the kindness of my heart I rushed out to the nearest clothes shop and bought her an outfit so that she could appear in public without food front.

I therefore believe I have a legitimate claim to the item in question. Thank you.

PS I couldn't afford to buy her a bottom half to go with the blouse, so I very kindly loaned her the ballet tights and tutu I had on at the tin

(I may have previously inferred on this website that I was born in 1979, but I was mistaken.)

disco. I didn't even know it was her to tell the truth...until she whispered 'Look of Love' in my ear. I said 'ere! I hain't having none of I care who you are, Ducky. I'm too young and young hearts run free and I love to be free!'

Then the music got turned up and I started to go-go dance on a podium. I don't know what I was on that night but I was so lost in the be my shirt off. I never saw it again until now. So Sue, forget framing that thing. You'd better give it back to me right now!

Oh but thanks for letting us see it. I guess you paid a lot for it. I saw you buying it and after all I wouldn't be able to get into my shirt thes you can keep it. If you give it a sniff that's my perfume. It was Chanel No. 5 at that time.

Ooh Rosie we'd better get a few podia in for DD 2010!😂 I'll be slim enough by then to wear the shirt Dusty gave me after I finally gave in a bought me 3 double vodkas and coke and I knocked them back. I'll say no more. I'm already saying too much and I know how private Dusty wasn't private that night for sure.....but I can't really remember.....But it was a shirt swap and that's the honest truth!

Memphis, you are to be commended for holding out until three double vodkas. Your restraint is admirable.😂

Actually I do have a genuine story about a raspberry pavlova: my mum left one in a carrier bag in a branch of M&S in Manchester in about so happened that the Queen was making a visit to the city on the same day, and thus the carrier bag was identified as a suspect package

So as to ensure the safety of Her Majesty, the raspberry pavlova was destroyed in a controlled explosion.😂

This story is best told by my mother at Christmas after she's had a sherry or two.

PS Sue, in all seriousness, it's lovely to see your amazing Dusty treasure, thank you for sharing it with us.😂

Oh that is so funny. That poor raspberry pavlova. What a waste! And trust your Mum to be into Pavlova. I guess you got it from her! LOL!

To be frank I didn't know what I was doing after those vodka and coke drinks. I only used to drink orange juice at clubs in those days. Dus' to answer for. And I just wish I could remember...😂

Just to bring this fracas to its conclusion I think I ought to point out that prior to healing the sick and raising the dead, I was a fledgling ck (I'm older than I look). I choose a fashionable nom de plume (Alice Pollock) and did what I did.

One night, backstage at a theatre, there was a clatter and I turned to see an angry looking young man looking in the direction of a miffed young lady, around whose feet were scattered the remnants of a tray load of smashed crockery. The man was being huckled quickly out of by two burly stewards, all the time saying "She did it!". The young lady, to whom his words were directed, was looking toward the stage ar heard her mutter something along the lines of "That was OUR song!!".

So engrossed in this was she, that she appeared not to have noticed that some of the Early Grey tea from the china pot had splashed accr blouse, leaving a very notable stain. Since I was carrying some of my work with me, I pulled a neatly ironed pink blouse from my satchel an the young lady, who took it gladly.

Smiling back at me, she ran onto the stage and I never saw her again.

Since I was carrying some of my work with me, I pulled a neatly ironed pink blouse from my satchel and offered it to the young lady, who took it gladly.

She asked how to get it back to me after the show and I smiled angelically and told her not to worry about it.

"But I must repay you!" she told me.

Smiling again at her, and noticing how tiny she really was, although the hair made her look bigger, I replied -

"No need.. write a song for me and call it something simple, like All I See Is You".

Smiling back at me, she ran onto the stage and I never saw her again.

Right. William. Darling.

It would appear that you had an encounter with Clive Westlake in a wig 🙄

And Memphis my dear, the consumption of intoxicating beverages is no excuse for behaviour so conspicuously lacking in ladylike decorum. I NEVER been guilty of drinking and then behaving inappropriately afterwards. 🙄

Now, Sue, I never said I was seduced but I think Dusty took a bit of advantage that night. Not that I'm complaining. 🙄

Latest on the blouse, received a reply from Pat Rhodes today, she says Dusty bought it sometime in 1963/64, after The Springfields.

Blimey! It's an early blouse? It's not mine after all then. 😊

Seriously, because of its age this makes the blouse even more precious and does this mean Dusty kept it or did Pat just save it for years a Very interesting and very precious. Sue, you got a real bargain.

Hi Memphis 😞 Nope, not yours after all 😞😞 Sorry to disappoint. Pat didn't say why she had kept it for so long, maybe for sentimental reasons.....?

Hello again to naughty girl Liz 🙄🙄🙄

Now then. More news, the Gremlin, after his terrible fright of young cousin Emily zipping in and wrenching those photo's (with ease) out of I hands, has had a change of direction in life, he has now become a 'born again' something or other, i don't think it's anything religious becau have not yet shrivelled or dropped off, but, he assures me that he repents his sins now that he realises that it was the late, great Dusty S her fans, against whom he was blocking. He has been fired from Photobucket in disgrace, so, i took pity on him. He now guards Dusty's pink good agreement, he gets a penny a day and a few Nobbly Bobbly ice-cream lollies a month. This seems to be keeping him very happy, and trusting, after all, i only have to mention the name 'Emily' to see him quiver with fright. He's also been told to take absolutely no notice of t claim ownership, be they sexy young or old(ish) models, or even Dusty look-alikes. So, there you have it, Liz. If you can get past him, goo you....but all hell will break loose.
