Another great one, Wendy. Did you really like Dusty's look of that era?

I love how you're getting into this too, Mary. Go, girls!

Allherfaces - I'm ashamed to say this, I was a fan in the 60's, then I heard nothing of Dusty for years. I remember nothing of the 1986 Hippodrome fiasco, and I am really ashamed to say that until about 6 months ago I knew nothing of Dusty's comeback. I knew she came back, but I switched off somewhere in the late 80's probably because I was travelling around the far east and Australia, and I only rediscovered Dusty via YouTube about 6 months ago. I don't read trashy Sunday papers or gossip columns so I knew nothing of her problems, I just thought she was doing fine in America during that period. I do like a lot of her costumes of that era, but here again I don't collect photos or memorabilia, I rely on what I can get off the internet, just love her voice and collect her music. I still find her early death extremely painful though, I haven't come to terms with it yet.

Forgive me Dusty for being such a bad fan, but I am back on track now, and I can enjoy all that I missed back in the late 80's right now. In fact Dusty has actually switched me back on to music, so the very least I can do is immortalise her in black and white.

Thank you Paula and Insomniacafe for your kind words of encouragement. I guess I just love doing folds.

Amen to what Cas says. No such thing as a bad fan if you're a Dusty fan in the present. Believe it or not, my story is somewhat similar to yours, although of course Dusty was not nearly as big in the US as in the UK. I liked her in the 60s, recall nothing of her Pet Shop Boys days...but some years ago...after her death...I (re)discovered her and my life has not been the same since.

Isn't it cool how many ways one can be a fan....including your artwork. Hope there will be much more.

Sorry about the poor photography, the drawing looks much better but I just can't seem to reproduce it with the camera.

Oh that is such a wonderful drawing Wendy. You seem to have got such movement into Dusty's mouth, you expect her to just break into song any second!
