Cas - the eyes look a whole lot better on the original, and the shading round the mouth. I spend hours doing the shading, only to find the camera doesn't pick half of it up. But you've only got to have a microscopic flaw, and the camera hones in on it and magnifies it times 10.

Wendy -
Really wonderful drawings!
You have obviously spent a lot of time on these and the results show it. Have you had much formal training? I would guess that you have. Keep up the good work. Know we all enjoy the results.

Thank you everyone for all your kind comments.

Misty - no, no training, just self taught.

This is not really Dusty related but lets say the dog chased Dusty's cat Nicholas to get over it, as I thought this was a nice little story. Last week I was looking after my 10 year old grandson (Ryan). He was sort of watching me draw all week, and I helped him by drawing one or two Dark Invaders or something like that. Then I bought him a pad and took him home. Apparently he went into his bedroom for an hour or so and came out with this picture he had drawn. Now this is a child that was born with Attention Deficit Syndrome, and was unable to sit down and concentrate on anything till he was 5. (His first 5 years were spent biting other children and somersaulting over the furniture). His parents didn't believe him at first. Even I would have been proud of that drawing. We were all totally stunned. He's never shown any aptitude before, it just came out of the blue. Ryan darling I always had faith in you baby. I gave him 15 out of 10 and a £5 note for encouragement.

How wonderful Wendy to find something your grandson loves to do, holds his attention and he shows he has a real talent for. Thanks for sharing the story. 😊

Great drawings, Hampson! I am partial to the one from Hippodrome era. Love that one. It is a very pretty interpretation.
