I like it too Cas, but I think it would be better with a nice plain pale wallpaper. I just feel the wallpaper detracts from the artwork.

I feel the same, I dont like the contrast of the two, the papers far too busy and loud and takes away the brilliant sunniness of dusty for me

I like it, it's very different than any other artwork I've seen of Dusty. It has a happy feel good feeling to it, probably due to the bright sunshine yellow color. As for the background, I have mixed feelings about it, a bit too busy, but overall I believe it does add to the "Mod" look and era.

It's "digital artwork." I've tried to contact the artist but with no luck...so far.

Henry contacted me and asked if I would post these for him, with this message....

I've attached three photos of drawings or paintings I did whilst a callow teenager at school in the sixties. I used to work on these at lunchtimes in the art room whence my art teacher claimed "Cowan - you've been seduced by the gramophone" - I suppose there could have been worse things considering how really innocent and naive we all were back then! Due to the fact they're old and the quality of glue and paper probably isn't what it is now plus the fact they have been in our attic for the last thirty four years (of marriage!!), they may not appear terribly smooth!

Nice that Dusty signed one for you Henry, and she liked it

Those are fantastic, Henry! What a great signature & comment you received from Dusty..was it signed 'live' or through the mail?

Can you tell me what the medium of the first one is?...looks like a print...if it not a print and is pencil or charcoal..that is amazing.

thanks for sharing & put those somewhere safe. 😊

Many thanks to Carole for posting those and to Paula for your comments also. The signed pencil drawing was mailed to Pat via the Fan Club (just before I became Irish Area Secretary) and was returned to me very promptly - I remember my mum took it into work to show her colleagues when it was returned! The monochrome first one was a painting using only black poster paint, black ink and wash which was a favourite method of mine then. Not sure what size the original photograph (copied from the New Musical Express I think), was, but my painting was full A4 size - its a very iconic image and one of my favourites. Pity people now associate the image with that book.

I'm back doing art classes now in my retirement - must try a new one of Dusty sometime!

Wow Henry - you finally managed to get them to us - and it was well worth the effort, they are all totally brilliant. I particularly like the last one, it has depth and feeling, i'm not good at describing art, but they are all just wonderful, and a pleasure to look at. The texture of the hair on the second picture and the detail is just superb. Thanks so much for letting us see them. I can't stop looking at them. That's how I judge good art, something that is so compelling that you can't tear yourself away. Lovely, lovely, lovely.

Dusty knew a good picture when she saw one then.

More Dusty art work from Henry's teenage collection with this explanation....

Attached are three more offerings - two were painted using ordinary school poster paints around 1966/1967 just before I went of to teacher training college. The painting technique isn't wonderful and one of the pictures has a tear in it - the result of removing it from a backing paper unfortunately. The first one is a wax resist - white crayon to block in the image then washed over with black paint.

Oh God Henry they are all wonderful, absolutely wonderful, I had to stand back a bit to see the third one, but it is superb, just love the coloured ones too. I think you had better go back to your roof space and see if you have any more up there just wasting away. We need to see them.

I particularly like the first coloured one too. Well all of them really. Love the hair on the two coloured ones. It gives both pictures a nice Dusty glow. All totally brilliant.

Thanks for showing us. I love them all.
