Perhaps someone recalls or can send me in the right direction to find a quote I am looking for. Perhaps it was by a music critic? Might have just been something on the Internet. But I think it was posted on some forum at some time (big help, huh?) Maybe even by me LOL.

Anyway, the gist of the quote is that the writer is talking about how emotional Dusty is in her songs, how much she needs love, etc and says something to the effect of would you (the beloved) please give her what she wants or how could you say no? The emphasis is on how powerful Dusty's pleas are--that one ultimately couldn't resist them.

Any help appreciated--this is for a paper.

This is driving me mad now! Right away I thought I knew what you meant and that it was in an article by a woman who stole Dusty (LP) from her father. But can I find it? Not on your nelly and now I'm feeling obsessive!

What's left of my memory tells me that it was a guy who said it.

Hope you don't grow crazy trying to find it, but I do appreciate the effort, and I knew if it rang a bell with anyone, it would with you!

I finally found the article I was getting obsessed about! It was in DSB no 30 and it's by Stacey D'Erasmø. Possibly still not what you're looking for but the quote that I was thinking of is ...

"Please," she sings softly on A Brand New Me, "let me get in your way". To be able to sing "please" like that is a kind of genius with a long lavender tradition. Dusty Springfield said "please" as beautifully as Gudy Garland ever did, but with this innovation: when Dusty said it, the "please" was unmistakably about sex.

That's not it, but it's a god one and will have to find a home somewhere in my schoolwork. Thanks, Carole.
