A well travelled lady at a time when plane travel was even worse than it is now. 😊

I disagree, I think plane travel was much better than. The skies were really friendly, no threat of terrorism. It was fun just to go to the gate and watch the planes take off for entertainment and maybe stop and get a drink. I recall when the 747 was new, I flew to Puerto Rico, the pilot very proudly invited all the passengers several at a time to the cockpit to see this new wonderful marvel. Can you imagine that happening today!!

I think what Kathy means is that it wasn't as easy to travel long distances, planes weren't as fast or as frequent and there weren't as many choices in airports. I agree that it was far more pleasurable in the 'olden' days though. 😊 As for Belgium, I nearly included it in my list as it's so close to Holland and she was there so many times that I'm sure she visited, but I just couldn't think of an instance.

I recall travelling on planes in the 1950's when my mother and I went to Malta from England Marty---long, long before 747's. In those days planes didn't fly high enough to fly above the weather and a storm with lightning was a terrifying experience. In between London and Malta the plane made an emergency landing in Paris because of fuel leaking, and hit really bad air pockets coming in to land in Rome. My mother fainted and was carted off and we missed our plane as it was only a fuel and lunch stop. The next plane to Malta was three days later!!! 😞😞😞 Oh and the storm was on the way back. Flying was a real adventure in those days!.

Hi Marty

Yes she did go to Belgium and also Holland. I know it's a Spanish protectorate but Majorca and The Canary Island.
