I found these videos of a guy, with a dashcam, driving around London. Lo and behold this one starts out on a familiar road. He makes a right turn at 0:53 seconds onto Aubrey Walk and at 1:46 you can see number 38 on the right (blink and you'll miss it). I had no idea that street was so cramped.

He heads to a main road, just as Dusty would have, and then onto a motorway which passes through Wembley. His other videos show more of the center of London and there are a few familiar buildings along the way. They are a great way to see London without the expense (are you listening Jeffery?)

* I can't get newyoutube links to work, even though I tried the solution Cor suggested, so just click the link.

I am returning to Hove again in a few weeks, the first time since my mum passed. I discovered a while back that Dusty's parents lived in the next street to us in Wilbury road/avenue. I shall make a point of going there and wondered if anyone knows the number? I will take the delectable Ms P for a photo shoot on the beach where Dusty was and also to see her star at Brighton Marina. 🌟

That's great Maggie, if a little vertigo inducing. 😊

Good luck in your quest Lynn.

Enjoyed the video Maggie. Thanks for posting! The only thing is..... everyone is driving on the road side of the road... at least to me. ha!

Hi Lynn, I have an address of 26 Wilbury Villas, Hove. Also have an address of 1 Romney Road, Rottingdean, Brighton.

Hi Donella, many thanks for the addresses. I will definitely do Wilbury Villas and if the weather is good Rottingdean also. There is always someone on here who can answer any Dusty questions. x I am reading your article today, thanks for the large print

This perhaps is more appropriately called "The streets where she may have shopped" but if you've longed to immerse yourself in the London of Dusty's teenage years here's your chance. A new book documents London of the 1950's:

Some really interesting photos of London in the 50's. Really dirty Albert Hall!
Thanks Maggie

I must be on a roll - this just popped up when I was poking around Youtube, looking for something else completely. For those of you who want more than just static pictures I give you - video:

I just watched a new documentary called My Generation on Netflix, chronicling the cultural shift in Britain in the sixties (music, art, youth culture). Astounded (and annoyed) that they missed Dusty from this, but still interesting from the perspective of providing cultural context to Dusty's life in sixties London.
