From something Kristin said in another thread, maybe it would be fun to try and pinpoint the exact location of some of Dusty's photo's. We've touched on this before and they're likely spread around the forum. So, although we know she had many photo's taken in places like Hyde Park and Central Park, finding the exact spot takes a little more effort.....but she's worth it 😊

I'll begin.

The Queens Gate, Kensington Gardens, London

I do believe I even have a photo of the stone of which she is sitting Cas 😊

If there is a photo you have wondered about but don't know the location of, maybe if you post it someone else will know.

The exact location of that photo was not too far from the Casino but in the gardens of the Hotel Savoy (where Dusty was likely staying). We found it on our visit to San Remo about 5 years ago. The pillars are still there but have been moved during renovation and re-landscaping.

Can someone pls identify which house is Dusty's , if it is in the picture, or is it a different one on the complex ?

Thank you.

Although I've been to Frogmill a couple of times, I never quite worked out which house it was. I did ask Simon sometime later and I seem to remember he said it was no.8 but I've not been back since.

statue. There is another Springfield's photo taken in the entrance to the small b/w building in the background.

I spent the day in Henley, yesterday and attempted to find the house in Frogmill, but wasn't successful (taxi driver didn't have a clue, and spoke very little English £15 later I was back at the bridge in town) however, I feel a bit less stupid this morning after reading Carole's post, as I consider her too be an authority on all things Dusty. In spite of not finding the house I had a lovely and memorable day in Henley. Heading back to London to visit Aubrey Road on Monday. Thanks to all the LTDs for the treasure trove of invaluable information.

So sorry you didn't make Frogmill, Sarah, it is such a beautiful area 🙄 . Should you visit Henley again let LTD know and someone will direct you via PM. I wont put details here as it is a private estate and I don't think the residents would take to kindly to a mass invasion. 🙄

Evelyn, the guy in the photo with Dusty was a friend of hers from the States. He was called Marv but I don't think he's alive now. Don't remember there being any other information about him.

Thank you Carole. I've seen the picture a number of times but never knew who he was.

It is the Stone house to the right of the flint house as Karen says.
When I visit I always walk down the river from Hurley lock, a nice walk down the Thames.

Yes, I think most of us know it as the one with the Granary sign(River Thames side) But obviously, that sign may now have been removed.

The Pulitzer Fountain on the corner of 5th Ave and West 58th Street, NY city. Directly in front of the Plaza Hotel and opposite the Paris Theatre.

Thanks, Darren,

I had an amazing time in Henley and also in London. When I get back to NY I will have to check out the Dusty Places mentioned here. Shouldn't be too hard to do, as "Autumn in New York" is indeed a lovely season. Best wishes to you.

Where exactly is Frogmill? Is it far from Henley-on-Thames?

I plan to visit it sometime if I'm in that area.

Thanks,

Mike.

Mike it is no distance from Henley on Thames if you follow the A4130 Henley Road to The BlackBoys Inn , just turn down Black Boy Lane at the side of this and Frogmill is at the end ..well worth a visit.. 😊

Mike,

It's approx 3 miles from Henley-on-Thames in the village of HURLEY on the A4130 road towards Maidenhead. Travelling from the Henley direction take the turning left AFTER The Black Boy public house and follow the road down towards the river. After a short distance you'll arrive at a cross-roads with caravans in front of you - here turn left and Frogmill is a matter of yards.

As a matter of interest properties here range from £1,441 000 to £2, 035 000 - the last house sold there was in 2009 which sold for £1,700 000 - it looks as though it's a place people like to be!

Hi Mike, if you are feeling energetic you can walk along the towpath by the river which is about 4 miles +. When Sarah (Britpop)took a taxi the driver did not where Frogmill was so make sure you have Brian's instructions with you. It is a private estate of dwellings. See above re Dusty's house. Hope you enjoy your visit.

Makes sense to post this again here. Any excuse to share the silliness of that wonderful day. And I'll be more than happy to play tour guide if anyone else wants to visit me in NY!

It's good to see that in 50 years, some places have not really changed.
