Miss the bulletin

■ by Clive » Wed Mar 24, 2010 7:58 am

It is a year this month since the final edition of Dusty Springfield Bulletin. Have to say I still miss it. It was always such a pleasure waiting for that A4 brown envelope in my mailbox at the beginning of every March July and November.

There was so much in it that couldn't be seen anywhere else and I always liked to know what CDs or DVDs were in the pipeline. Paul Howes did such a great job with it.

Yes, I subscribed at the end, and received the last four issues. I still go back and read them. They had some nice articles, but also many beautiful photos of Dusty. Great stuff!

At one time DSB was the only source of info until the advent of the internet & groups like the wonderful LTD after which in my opinion it became obsolete so I stopped subscribing. Paul's Dusty 'bible' along with LTD are all I need these days.

🗉 That about sums it up Humboldt. By the time I got hip the bulletin was done. I have yet to see one. Thank goodness Simon introduced me to LTD. 🌹

It was such a treat to get a new Bulletin in the mail. ..the brown paper wrapping and the anticipation of getting to see what fabulous cover Paul came up with. certainly better than bills and advertisements 😊

I definitely miss the Bulletin. Paul would be the first to agree that the internet made a big impact on the need for the Bulletin but for me, just holding in my hands a whole magazine dedicated to Dusty, was amazing. I miss seeing the new pictures, it was always a thrill to see something rare that he'd found. I also miss the interviews he did with people who worked with Dusty and the insight they provided. I wasn't a member in the beginning but I bought every back issue and I often browse through them and have my mind jogged about something I'd long forgotten. So yes, I definitely miss it but I understand why Paul had to wind it up when he did.

There's a part of you, that's a part of me...

I miss the DSB too, but I often look through back copies and always find something I had forgotten or missed when I read them before.

I really enjoy reading all the interviews again.

I miss the DSB too. It was a one-of-a-kind magazine and though the internet is great, there's nothing like holding the freshly printed magazine in your hands, as Carole G says. No doubt, Paul has new Dusty projects cooking!
