Our beloved Dusty left us at 10:40 p.m. GMT on 2 March, 1999.

Wherever you are, please take a minute of silence to remember Dusty this Friday:

UK 10:40 p.m.
USA East Coast 5:40 p.m.
USA West Coast 2:40 p.m.

(Western Australia= Saturday 12:40 p.m.?)

Let's light candles around the world.

P.S. Perhaps some of us could meet up on MSN for a group hug around 10:45?

I can't make Msn 😞 I have work tomorrow. But will definitely try for a moment silence.

Be decked out in my Dusty badges Rob sent me!

I'm confused. 1040pm in the UK is 9.10am tomorrow morning here.

Rest in Peace beautiful Dusty! Miss You!

Dusty has her own section of my 'happy wall' which is behind my computer desk. I have it covered in things that can make me smile, I have heaps of family, friends, animal pics up, postcards etc. (i have another shelf which has all her cds etc up)

I volunteered to eat the donuts.
The candle was burning. Scented one. However, all I smelt was burning ..eek .
Then i burnt the side of my right thumb on the cigeratte lighter. Sooo co-ordinated.

A couple of piccies from Henley on Friday. There were 3 small bunches (mainly unopened buds) already in the pots so I added some pink, red and purple...

a couple of pots - large purple (back left) & small deep red (front right) - plus a few more pink, purple, red & white. Another lady came along with the white pot (back right) which was added and I ended up with...

It was fairly windy (sunny though) but I think I did OKish; hopefully the good lady herself approved!!

I passed everything on to Dusty and let her know how very much she is loved and missed; I also lit a candle in the church and said a quiet prayer for her... I like to think she was around watching and listening 😊

There are a couple more piccies at : Dusty 2007

Well, I am sorry I missed it but the remembrances look wonderful and it's so touching that everyone found a quiet minute to reflect and remember.

Of course it's an anniversary that weighs on me. I haven't been able, in the last few years, to separate it from all the other grievance issues that I have to deal with (my mother passed away in 2003; over the last three years my partner and I have suffered through three miscarriages; not to mention several other 'deaths,' such as losing several friendships, including one that had lasted for 26 years); it's all just one big sea that I'm crossing, so when grief threatens to overwhelm me and regret fills me head to toe; when I find myself wishing with all my might that things were different, and that time could be turned back, I remember this poem by Pablo Neruda, which helps me get through:

If I die, survive me with such a pure force
you make the pallor and the coldness rage;
flash your indelible eyes from south to south,
from sun to sun, till your mouth sings like a guitar.

I don't want your laugh or your footsteps to waver;
I don't want my legacy of happiness to die;
don't call to my breast: I'm not there.
Live in my absence as in a house.

Absence is such a large house
that you'll walk through the walls, hang pictures in sheer air.

Absence is such a transparent house
that even being dead I will see you there,
and if you suffer, Love, I'll die a second time.

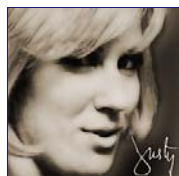

We remember Dusty by how we ourselves live.

Mary
