I'm presuming it's the one that was talked about on here a couple of years back. I had a few emails with Aoife Scott, (who had a zillion questions), hopefully we can somehow get to see it.

Maybe a prob if commentary is in Gaelic - but never the less interesting.

Simon posted this on Facebook. The subtitles are in Gaelic rather than English, which seems a bit pointless (!) but you can still get the gist of it.

Thanks Carole a nice brief history of Dusty. I think the subs may have been in Gaelic because a lot of people can read the language but not speak it. I knew a lass who spoke it and she explained that the written word is not spoken as it appears. Hope you get my meaning it's difficult to explain.

Well I had a look at this documentary. I have to say nothing new here!

I was so so disappointed at the usual focus on Dusty's gay anguish, her drink problems and her self harming. I would have thought, in a 12 minute programme, the time would be better spent talking about her accomplishments! Yes and maybe a bit more about her Irish roots.

I understood that they intended to make this a celebration of her life and her achievements. Instead anyone coming to Dusty for the first time has been left with the impression that she was a poor tragic figure. Only at the last she was a survivor as she had beaten her 'demons'!

Thanks Carole. 🙏

Some nice music & clips amongst the short Film. 😊

Agree with Donella's previous comment 🍏 (Re :The Living Famously Documentary) about biographer Lucy O'Brien : After for so long being a champion of Dusty, why does Lucy (Like Vicki) seem to take every opportunity to take pot shots at Dusty? 🗣️

I agree, I get sick of it and I also felt more would be about Dusty's Irish connection, I thought that was the point. Lucy O'Brien always states her "facts" as if she personally knew Dusty and was there, her smirk annoys me! I met her once and she was quite pleasant but I never like to see her pop up on documentaries, there are far more worthy people.

Agree with this. Lucy O'Brien's comments about Dusty were all about her problems! 🗨️ 🗨️

There your post was at the same time as mine Carole.

I am glad to know you agree! 😊 😊

Well, what can I say? Other than I am very sorry about the comments I posted earlier regarding this Irish TV Documentary on Dusty!

The YouTube clip is only part of the programme! My comments were based on this short and somewhat skewed excerpt from the documentary.

I have just clicked on the original link posted by Clive and watched the entire 40+ minute documentary. This piece is extremely well put together and produced . It does do justice to Dusty and talks a great deal about her Irish connections. It is great to see contributions from some people we haven't heard from before. What Lucy O'Brien has to say is positive and balanced. And whilst there is, inevitably, some talk of Dusty's lost times, it does not overwhelm the programme. Also the subtitles are in English so we can understand all that is said! 😊

I do feel that this documentary presents Dusty as the great star that she was! 🌟

Having just watched the whole programme, it had a deal of sensitivity which was nice. OK nothing new but I found no fault or errors which made a nice change. Because of the sincere way it was presented it became quite moving and I was a bit teary at the end. Overall I think the Irish are proud of Mary O'Brien. Thanks TG4 and to Clive.

The 12min trailer goes to show how things taken out of context give you the wrong impression.

I'm Sticking by what I said above. 😞 : After writing a perfectly respectable (Some might say too respectable) Biography & updated Biography of Dusty, Lucy In Subsequent Interviews since Dusty was published seems to have read Dancing With Demons to help her answer the interviewers questions regarding

Dusty Springfield. 🙄

That's much better! I hadn't realised that the link now worked and hadn't thought to check back. This was much more rounded, Simon spoke well and I was particularly drawn to the last 10 minutes or so, some new faces. It was nice to see Anne Marie again, as I met her in 2000 and she's a lovely lady. Dusty did sign her visitor's book a second time as "Dusty", as I took a photo, she obviously just couldn't find it. Nice also to hear the tale from the taxi driver about the history of the O'Brien family. I haven't changed my view on Lucy O'Brien, she's an excellent music journalist but I don't like watching her talk about Dusty. It was very well put together, especially with Dusty's Irish songs, but they did something I hate, and that's include those clips of a face and figure pretending to be Dusty when it clearly isn't! It's been done before in Dusty documentaries and I never understand why, it cheapens them (IMO of course!)

Maybe we could contact the Irish production company to let them know about the community of Dusty fans who are desperate to see this programme!

We could ask if they can make it available for us to see?

I tried watching from the US several times and only a black screen appeared. Same for all the other clips on the website.

I'm not keen on the part about the musical and that they will show the 'whole picture'. I think somethings are best left untouched, I don't think Dusty would be best pleased about this if she were with us.

I'm also surprised they haven't dropped the Adele rumours yet.
