Thanks for finding it Neil. I had to get back from holiday to finally see it on something larger than my phone! I had seen the whole clip before at a friends house but it's been a while. It makes me smile and I'll bet it made Dusty smile too when she saw it back 😊

PS. I would love those shoes!

Thank you, Neil and also Ed, for the earliest post.

What a trip!!! Dusty looks beautiful and is in great voice and the whole costume and scenario is tres camp, to my eyes.

A couple of questions--sorry if these have already been addressed and I missed them, and they are rather dense but ...

sounds like the tempo of the song was increased for this performance, yes?

also, this is described as live--apparently that means she recorded it for the show and then lip synched it during the show?

I had the exact same thoughts, Nancy. It seems faster, and the singing doesn't sound live, either, but rather pre-recorded and lipsynched. And what a camp setting for our girl! 🥰

At first I thought Dusty was lip-synching to the non-soundtrack recording of the song and thought that any difference was simply due to the fact that, although Philips US used the same recording as was issued in the UK, the version issued in the US was mixed differently as Paul H mentions in the Bible.

Even accounting for that, I am still not sure whether it is a live performance or not. Against it being the version issued by Philips is the fact that the TV performance is some 40 seconds shorter than the single, unless Philips US edited it on promo copies, like they did with All Cried Out.

I do not believe his is a live singing performance.

It was quite common in the 60's for artists appearing on TV shows to pre-record their vocals for the show.

Hullabaloo did this and I know on the SOPM Ed Sullivan performance, Dusty used a pre-recorded track because of the musicians strike.

So, this may have been one of those rare pre-recorded appearances.
