Hi everyone!, shocked to see all the Wisteria has been removed from Dusty's former home, interior renovations are also in progress.....

Such a shame, I think.

So do you suppose someone has purchased it, and thus is remodeling it?

I am shocked too as it was only a few months ago that Cor and I stood in front of the yellow door that was on the place. Gee I'm glad we had those photos taken before this happened.

I do understand about the wisteria though, as a gardener I know how rampant it is, it needs much more space than it was given and its root easily undermine a foundation. Hope the renovations do the place justice.

That looks so much different Mark doesn't it? Looks like someone's bought it and is doing it up. Thank you for the up to date pics.

You're welcome everyone!.....it's a pleasure to share pics, the funny thing is that the precise moment I arrived at Dusty's home it started felt like Dusty was saying to me "how dare they mess about with my house"!

The yellow door has been taken off it's hinges and was in the front room, though the interior of the window is so filthy I couldn't take a dec though it can just be glimpsed in the fifth pic down.

The house adjoining to the left is also now empty.....somethings afoot!😱😱

Oh the poor house looks naked without it!!! Although I understand that it can cause serious structural damage to the walls, but still... I agree it seems as though summat's afoot - I wonder what will happen next? I wonder if someone has bought No.38 and the house next door they read what was written previously on here about it being made into a museum, and some generous multi-millionaire is granting our wish

Thanks for the update and the (great as always) new pics, Mark..

Ahh! That's such a shame they took down the wisteria. It was really pretty - even if a little overgrown. But it added character to the house thought!

Quite a shock to see the house so bald😱 Couldn't they just have left a little bit still growing? Thanks for the photo's Mark, I wonder if there's sort of rule with the sale that says the plaque stays where it is? I seriously hope so.

oh well so they`ve just gone and chopped down the bloody wisteria, not just some, but every sodding piece of it, kathy I really do apprec botanical side of things, but on this particular occasion, I just cant help thinking you rotten, miserly, miserable bunch of fg dusty rot shysters from hell. I loved that wisteria, im gutted. But thankyou mark for bringing this heresy to my attention.

Well, clearly the house has not been bought by a Dusty person, that's for sure. The (overgrown) Wisteria is one sad piece of destruction b looking at the inside of the house.

Rather sad, sort of any end to an era. Trying to keep optimistic, maybe it won't be too bad once the construction is completed and when/ plaque is re-hung on the building. Too bad us fans could't come up with the money and turn it into a museum.

too bad. It does look quite plain now, doesn't it? They should have kept a little bit of the Wisteria...I also hope they put the yellow door ba hinges and the plaque back on the wall..where it belongs

The plaque is on the wall, it can be seen in the photos! Hope they keep it there.

Oh thats a bit of a shame. I guess it couldnt just be pruned or I'm sure they would have done so.

They can't take off the plaque can they??

LOVE MADS.

The inside of the house that is being torn up isn't how it was when Dusty lived there, though. I met the lady who used to live there and sh was different.

I was thinking about the museum too. It's a nice dream.

Sadly that's something that crossed my mind too, next door is also empty and being renovated, the thing is there's not much in the way of facilities there and that's something that has to be taken into account when it comes to planning permission, I'll probably make one more tr Christmas and give an update.....

Oh my! 🙄 I have to admit, I didn't even recognise which house it was without the wisteria! Kathy and I really WERE lucky to see it still into Hope they keep the yellow front door at least...

Thanks for documenting this for us, Mark!
