PSB and Susan Boyle

by st louis blues » Thu Dec 19, 2013 4:34 am

I was looking around to see if Dusty's name had come up recently on Google news and found something that I had not been aware of before. I believe it was in the Guardian newspaper. There was a little snippet about Susan Boyle and it said she had turned down the PSB invitation to sing Dusty's part with them at Glastonbury. Anybody else aware of this? I didn't know if this was a joke or not. I have nothing against Susan, but I cannot imagine her even attempting to do this. I also can't imagine why the boys would make that offer since it seems to me that her style of singing is nothing like Dusty's. What do you think? Did this really happen or is this a rumor?

I really can't imagine this happened - unless Neil Tennant was 'out of it' at the time 😊
Susan Boyle is the singer who is most probably the farthest away from Dusty you could get!
The PSB have better taste IMO

The Guardian article was the only thing I could find except for a flimsy reference to PSB appearing at Hogmanay with a vague mention of SB. There's nothing on the PSB website that I could see.

Weird combination that would be though! 😞 cant see it somehow, I think they would always have just wanted to honour and include Dusty at Glasto. 😊

Cannot imagine Susan Boyle singing WHIDTDT. I like some of her songs and it seems she's had a bit of a hard life. But Dusty Springfield she is not. Totally opposite ends of the spectrum.

Susan Boyle is on the Jonathan Ross Show tonight, not that I'll be watching.

Simple answer NO (Never liked him). Much prefer Graham Norton.

Thought I had read something about SB and JR. She had a "shambolic" rehearsal for show, followed by near collapse so it was "pulled". She is going through one of her bad times and has had to cancel Middle East concerts.
