THEY FLY around, these jet-set chicks of the pop world. Wings a-fluttering, they regard the mighty Atlantic as little more than a ditch.

Take Dusty Springfield. She's always loved America; specially the soul and the fervour of the music she hears there. It was Cliff Richard who once described her as sounding "like a white Negress", and certainly some of her best friends are stars like Martha Reeves of the Vandellas.

Dusty hopped the Atlantic to record "Son Of A Preacher Man" and then the magnificent "Brand New Me", soaking up the Memphis, Tennessee, studio atmosphere for singles which incredibly didn't hit the top.

She's always wanted an international image. Now she's decided that the best way to get it is to split her working year between Britain and America. She'll build her reputation in the States via television and concert work; still record there; but STILL return to play hostess at shows for her many British fans.

These the ones you mean Matt?
