As Misty said on another thread "how about the eyes"? Dusty had such expressive eyes, they were a big part of her whole beauty and charisma. So lets see your favourite eyes pics. I'll begin with....

That Memphis shot always makes me think of Dusty's eyes being sort of vacant but it still doesn't stop me likeing the picture and I love the first pic Cas posted too because I think thats the true colour...sort of khaki as Dusty would say. Sophie, the one you posted for Mary has perfect make-up!

This is one of my favourite rewind and watch again 🥰 moments from the RAH concert at the beginning of "Quiet Please..." when she looks straight down the camera!

Bev-

There are several shots of Dusty from the RAH concert that were good but the one you posted is super. Don't know how to 'freeze' a photo from a DVD, so any you have of the start of 'Quiet Please' would be outstanding. Actually all the eye pics are wonderful. 😊 thanks for posting them.

She did have beautiful eyes, worked so well with the make up too. With those long lashes, they remind me somtimes like butterflies 🦋

I LOVVVE the last one! I loved her hair like that. I admit. I tried to get my hair to flick out like that..but 1) it's too long and heavy AND 2) i burnt my forehead with the curling wand tonight (don't laugh...it left a burn mark LOLOL)

The LOL pic must not be rationed. Everytime I look at it, it takes my breath away. 😊
And the last pic from '78 has always been my favorite look-so open and fresh and natural.
Of course, this opinion is subject to change with my moods 🙄

I came across this from after Dusty died....

THE TRUTH BEHIND DUSTY'S PANDA EYES

Quite rightly Dusty Springfield has been described as one of the finest female singers of her time. That woman sure knew how to work a song. But I don't think it's unfair to say she'll be remembered just as much for her unique use of eye make up; she didn't just sweep it on, she loaded it with a trowel. Now, reading her obituaries, I see that the unique Dusty look sometimes took several days: she'd layer her eye liner over a five day period, dusting it with powder to make sure it didn't smear while she slept. I should snigger; but actually I'm overawed at the thought of such application in both senses of the word.

The eyes are supposed to be the window to our souls. It's why many of us either over-stare or look away when telling lies; why we lower our lids when experiencing feelings we don't want to share; why we roll them to signify chaos. it's probably also why we prettify them: I must admit that when I want to impress with a 'no make up' look, I sleep in mascara and wipe it off in the morning so it leaves my eye area 'naturally' darkened. Dusty's obsession was just a variation on a common theme: and they coined the phrase 'panda eyes' around her look. Which, if we read something about her soul into that simile, means, I suppose, that she was a rare, solitary creature who spent a lot of time in hiding but who, on her occasional forays out of the wilderness, shone like a rare star.
