Has anyone else seen the new movie "The Social Network", the story behind the founding of Facebook?

I found it very interesting and well acted.

In a moment of six degrees from Dusty, there is a scene devoted to the boat races in Henley, so there are scenes of athletes rowing on the river. In the background I spotted a church steeple but it's probably not St. Mary's. I wondered if Dusty ever got down there to watch the event?

I'll be in London in a few weeks and hope to get out to Henley for a brief afternoon visit. I've been trying to get out there for years but always have a difficult time finding time in my busy trip schedule to accommodate the visit. Fingers crossed for this trip and the right weather.

I've only seen trailers of the movie so far. How come the Henley boat races feature in it?

Fingers crossed you can make it to Henley. It's really worth a visit. But then again, you know that. 😊

It would probably take too long to explain the Henley connection in the movie, so I won't bore everyone to tears with it. The short version, the college lads are rowers for Harvard and attend a race in Henley.

And thank you, that was the steeple in the movie background!
