I'm more than a little fascinated with Google Maps and I decided to type in Herengracht 125, the address DVD gave as Dusty's when she was in Amsterdam. Try this link, if it doesn't work, just type in Herengracht 125 and you can see the house and the view around. You may need to click on the Streetview icon.

Thanks for that, Carole! I once used Google Earth to get a look at Henley. Worked fine, too.

I remembered I'd once posted this quote from an article on Dusty...

She talks quite a bit about her impatience with her own vocal imperfections, the long years of wanting to sound like someone else - Aretha Franklin, Ray Charles, Ronnie Gilbert. But now she says, "I think that I'm essentially a ballad singer. I used to find that rather upsetting and I don't anymore. People need to be sad sometimes." When she was living for a time in Amsterdam, she says, unsure about her future, "I used to put on the saddest music I could find and put my head between the speakers just so that it would make me weep." What did she listen to?

She looks at the coffee table. "It was Enya, actually, or Tchaikovsky. Which'd really do it any day - over looking the canals with the rain falling into them, my head between the speakers, just letting it out." She laughs at the memory. "I don't suggest that people do that with my records, but it's certainly a good thing to do with Tchaikovsky."

Great one, Carole. 😊

I wonder if any of us have ever done that with Dusty's records? 😊 makes me weep to think she was that sad. I think we have all been there and thats why music is so powerful. it can make our moods change all the time.

Liz, that is quite sad, but after I thought about it for a second, it really made me think. Sometimes, crying is a good release, and to me, it feels like it was the start of her healing from those long years of self-neglect and abuse; ultimately, it led her to the peace she seemed to find in the last decade of her life.

I have often thought of Dusty's homes in America. Is it possible to know where dusty lived whilst she was there?. A tour of Dusty's American homes would be very interesting.

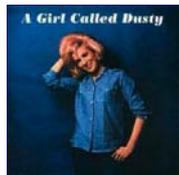

love julie 😊

yes I agree with that too. I think it was a huge triumph for her that she came through all the bad things and as she said on TV she didnt want to be like that anymore so she got sober etc. "doing it was easy, staying good was the difficult part" such a shame she managed to come out of all of that and was enjoying herself at last then the dreaded Breast cancer denied her of the good times she was starting to have.

I don't think I can help unfortunately 🙁 I did have a couple of addresses a few years back but I think they were stored on my computer along with a couple of pics, but two computer crashes and a steadily dwindling memory later and I can't think where to look. If I do, I'll come back here.

The Archives of Let's Talk Dusty! - T...

I've thought about a possible road trip to LA sometime...and trying to find Dusty's homes would be on the itinerary. I know we have had a photo at one time posted of her home in the hills. I'm sure someone knows the location...past fans (no longer on the forum) did have this info. hopefully someone can pop up w/ an address.
