Saturday Janice drove me over to Henley. We went to Waitrose and bought a basket of lil pink roses for Dusty and a pretty lil sweet pea card and brought them over to her marker. When we were taking photos a lady with a baby in a stroller passed by, surprised to see Dusty had been laid to rest there. She took our picture (I don't know what happened to one of my legs on the second one) and said she loved Dusty's music. An older man came by and said "I didn't even know she was dead!" And then remarked, she had great red hair!

I'm including photos of the Dusty Springfield rose behind the bench; Janice says it was planted by Trudy a while back. The other flowers are from the streets of Henley.

After this, we went inside the church and lit some candles for Dusty. I also took some photos there for people who haven't been inside and are curious.

Then we took a look in Music World, and headed away for some lunch. We went to the Black Boys Inn, but this rather snobby innkeeper said the kitchen had just closed for lunch...at 1:45 p.m....but I took a picture from there because the turn off is Frogmill Road and so this gives a picture of the countryside near where Dusty lived before moving to the "bottom." We proceeded to The Red Lion where we had a fine lunch.

Excellent day; great to spend time with Janice, a dear friend, and kudos to her for managing so well the Dusty flower fund on behalf of the Dusty online communities.

This was the perfect way to say goodbye to England. I miss her already.

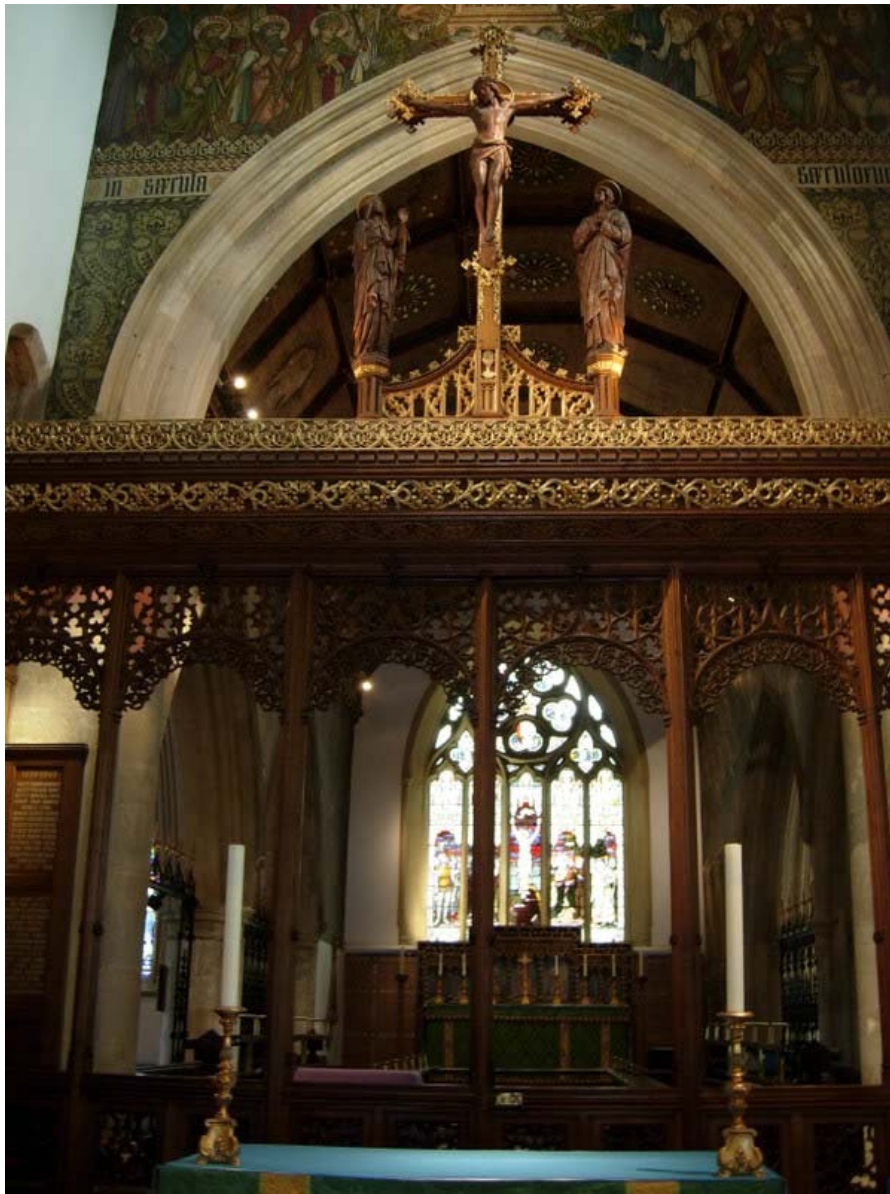

Looking out Frogmill Road..

wikid photos, thanks Nancy!! It's so nice to see the two of you had such a great day together

I love your hair Janice, it looks awesome

The lil logo on the sign in the last picture is pretty similar to the logo of the company i work for

Thanks for checking on Dusty and making sure she's ok

Clare xoxo

Lovely photo's Nancy, just perfect for you to have your last day in Henley, even if the Black Boy wouldn't feed you! I hope the man in the churchyard wasn't confusing our Dusty with Cilla

I'm going to make an embarrassing confession... I didn't know there were other burial plots near Dusty. From the photo's I'd seen... I kinda thought she was on her lonesome.

There's no one right next to Dusty, but it is a graveyard attached to the church.

Don't be embarrassed....that's just the way it looks in most of the photies.

Wonderful photos Nancy, lovely to see inside of the church as I have never actually been in...not being a church type person. You both look really happy and heathly.

The graves in the photo's kinda freak me out a little. Maybe cos they are above ground.

Daww but her marker looks so lovely with all those flowers!!

Lovely photos Nancy and Janice. The shot of the horses - was that taken from a train? If so, then that's where I keep my horses!

No, that was on Frogmill Road. But you should post pics of your horses on the pets thread !

Dusty's marker does look so small and isolated next to those cryptsnice pics Nancy. Pretty little church and a nice view from Frogmill. Looks like you and Janice had a nice day...though that is the biggest wine glass I have ever seen. 😊😄

Those are some great photos. Clear as a bell, and really gorgeous. Nice to see INSIDE the church. It's rather gorgeous. By the way, those flowers are AMAZING! Mmm pansies ? I can never quite remember the trumpet-shaped ones...
