Notice that Williams Sanoma has raw Tupelo Honey for sale in its catalogue. Must be real special as harvested and processed by hand and produced by bees for only two weeks each year when tupelo gum trees are blooming in wetlands of the American South. So it's for real and not just a person!

Oh, and it must be liquid gold as 20oz. goes for $24.95.

Cool. I never knew Tupelo Honey was so exotic.

Now how do you all like Dusty's cover of that song?

I wish she sang it using the same gender as Van M. 😊

This is the one Dusty song I don't care for.

It's never been a big favorite of mine either, Andy, but it's grown on me.

I love her singing it, she sounds so wistful and gentle on it. 😊

I guess being from the south I find all that southern stuff a bit irksome. I cannot stand this song or Willie and Laura Mae Jones and puttin' on some bbq. I just don't think they are very good songs. Dusty is the only reason I would ever play either one and I usually skip over to something I like bettah. I may get some of the honey tho as I am a sucker for the write up with the ad--I mean the wetlands of the American South you'll.

I love the 'southern' songs, to me they're all home cookin', napping on a rockin' chair on the front verrandah, swimmin' in the local river, and just country innocence.

Is life still like that in Dixie?.....or have i been watching too many ole movies! 😬😬😬

Mark--I can see the appeal and Sleepy Time Down South is one of my favorite songs. The Antebellum South is worth a look if you are ever over here. Beautiful Plantation homes and great food! Natchez, Ms. is one of my favorite places in the south, BUT this is the same place that led to the song "Strange Fruit". And I am old enough to remember Jim Crow and the ugliness associated with it. That is also Dixie and not told too accurately in the old movies. I mean Mammie looked like one happy woman according to Margaret Mitchell and David Selznick.
