This song has always intrigued me. Serious words with a bossa nova beat! But I love it anyway. I know the last line bothered Dusty and she even consulted her brother Tom about changing it to something else.

In most publications it is shown as:

"And bury me again"

which makes no sense at all

When you listen to the song, Dusty seems to be singing

"And bury me a care"

still not all that much sense but better. What do others think? 😊

Did you hear somewhere that it was the last line Dusty wanted to change Kathy? Paul's book only says it was one word and having asked brother Tom she didn't take his suggestion. I think "and bury me again" does fit in with the rest of the song, which is about love and death, plus it rhymes with "pain"!

Here are the lyrics to "Who"....

(charles aznavour / herbert kretzmer)

Who, when my life is through?
Who will know the joy
I have known with you?
Who will touch your face?
Sleep in your embrace?
Who will take my place
When i sleep alone?

Who, when the day is done?
Who will hold the hand
Of my only one?
Who will climb the heights?
Finding in your nights

All those wild delights
Only i have known

You say you'll always love me
Time has another claim
Why do the gods above me
Play the cynical game?

Oh, life, isn't what it seems
Fickle as the wind
Fragile as a dream
When i end my years
Who will ease my pain?
Kiss away my tears?
And bury me again?

bury me again?

Perhaps it makes more sense in French! 🇫🇷

A few thoughts...

A second life.

Life has been difficult and with this loss it once again will feel like a death.

I have always looked upon it as a combination of both.

Hmmm interesting interpretation Marty. It's as good as any explanation I've heard. 😊
