You're welcome Cas!.....it certainly out of control, the longer it's left the harder it'll be to trim!, and as before no one is in occupation, the letter box is sealed with a note saying all letters etc; to be delivered to next door!

Lovely pictures Mark, thanks. I'll bet there are millions of creepy crawlies behind all that wisteria (including spiders).

Wow! The wisteria is pretty, but shame it's all overgrown! How long has the house been unoccupied for? I'm surprised no-one lives there, or is it really expensive to buy? Shame some of us couldn't get together and tidy it up a bit!

That's just gorgeous! Is it really that overgrown...I don't know anything about attending to wisteria obviously!

I forget the price tag, Angel, and I wonder if it has dropped at all. It was really expensive.

It would be the perfect spot for the Dusty Museum, although the neighbors might not agree. Maybe a nice little "house museum"? It's a nice dream!

I can't for my life imagine why nobody lives there! I mean, it's a gorgeous house, a wonderful quiet neighbourhood, and it's right slap bang in Notting Hill! Not to mention the wonderful wisteria!

Come on, have a heart, anybody out there! The blonde lady with the fat wallet, maybe?

Yeah, Cor and I stood there a few weeks ago posing for photos. At that time the wisteria was full of buds. Great memories and wonderful to see your photos Mark, thanks for posting.

You're welcome everyone!.....I recall just under a year ago I paid my first visit to no.38 and the Lady that resided there then said to me "you should have been here a couple of weeks ago, the Wisteria was lovely".....so with that thought in mind and being a bright sunny day at 7am yesterday morning completely spur of the moment I thought to myself 'let's see if that Wisteria is in bloom', and lo and behold it was!

It's a shame no one seems to be living there though, but if they were I wouldn't have got quite so close to the House!

Walking towards no.38.....

After I done what I wanted to do in Aubrey Walk I then walked down to Kensington High Street a took some snaps of Alma Cogan's and Radclyffe Hall's former homes which are posted on the 'where you going, where you been' thread.....

Mark,
Thanks for sharing! I wondered if anyone lived there when I was there a few years ago??

Thanks for the photos Mark. Lovely wisteria but horribly overgrown. Almost hides Dusty's plaque. And does hide several windows. Such a neat looking street except the jungle of wisteria. I love excess but that is too much even for me 🤔😅

I've got a good thing

It really is gorgeous, but all I could think was "structural damage" !!

Thanks for those photos Mark.The wisteria should be cut back as Dusty's plaque is virtually invisible.!!

yowzah...that is one monster wisteria. I had a Wisteria plant (bush) at my last house and I could not get it to flourish..maybe the trick is to just leave it alone and ignore it.🙄 I wonder if it attracts a lot of bees?

...thanks for the pics, Mark

I feel like Will, am pretty sure there will be structural damage, as I had one grow in my garden wall and it separated the bricks. We had to get some serious weed killer to get rid of it.

Mel, I think it was occupied until it went on the market this past year.

What a sham that such a gorgeous plant could damage a houses structure.
Wouldn't you think that the neighbors would be concerned?

Were the wisteria growing there when Dusty lived there? I am sure she liked the color.

If you see Mark's post, you'll see that it's still for sale because there is a sign for the mail to be delivered next door.

I think if you did a search of Aubrey Walk you will find the previosu thread that had the asking price. or you might google it. it was a lot of money.
